Swimming pool ordinance not being enforced

Exactly whose responsibility is it, anyway?

Whose responsibility is it? Should the building department, health department and city engineer form a posse to roam the neighborhoods looking for people with private swimming pools who have not acquired installation permits?

Should the building commissioner go out and handcuff all the violators, drain their pools and slap on a fine?

Do neighbors have to secretly call in complaints about people not following swimming pool regulations?

Wouldn't it be a lot easier for all the residents owning pools to just walk into the Building Department at 1434 Miner St., hands in the air, admit not knowing about the permits and make arrangements to have their pools inspected?

The swimming pool ordinance was written for the "health, safety and welfare" of all citizens, not just the owners.

IN THE EIGHTH WARD, Ald. Alan Abrams said he has received many phone calls from people asking about the regulations for installing above-ground swimming pools. "When I ask the people if they have permits or whether they've called the building department for information, the answer has been — no."

The ordinance covers three types of pool.

A class "A" swimming pool is any swimming or wading pool more than 18 inches in depth and capable of containing 1,500 gallons of water or any pool having an exposed water surface area in excess of 400 square feet . . . intended only for the use of the owner, his family, friends and guests.

A CLASS "B" swimming pool shall mean any pool other than a class "A" swimming pool having a depth of more than 18 inches at private residences intended only for the use of the owner, his family, friends and guests.

An underground pool shall mean any pool which is constructed partially or entirely below the surface of the ground.

No portion of a private swimming pool or its associated equipment shall be located less than eight feet from any property line. This limitation does not apply to an enclosing fence.

No person shall install, construct, enlarge, or later alter any class "A" swimming pool within the City of Des Plaines unless an installation permit is first obtained from the Building Commissioner and Health Department, the ordinance states.

THE SAME IS TRUE for operating

by MIKE ZAREMBA

Residents unaware of the city's new private swimming pool ordinance are not alone — some of the city officials don't know all the details either.

The new ordinance — governing the installation and operation of all private pools in Des Plaines — was supposed to go into effect May 1.

But it seems to be having difficulty finding its way out of the ordinance book and becoming something more than just 12 pages of rules and regulations.

The problem is manpower, according to Building Commissioner, Al Prickett, who is responsible for enforcing the new ordinance.

The ordinance, amended September 5, 1972, states that both the health department and city engineer are to assist Prickett in issuing installation and operational permits. No one has contacted either department this summer for pool inspections.

PRICKETT SAID his department has been burdened with issuing construction and sign permits and he hasn't had the time or the manpower to implement the ordinance.

"The council has enacted an ordinance that directs me to implement it. If I can get the people to do it I will," Prickett said. Robert McKoveck, plumbing inspector, issues the permits for the pools. McKoveck said he simply doesn't have the help to carry out the ordinance the way it's written.

Council committees worked with the health department and Charles Hug, assistant to City Atty. Robert DiLeonardi, for about four months last year to re-write the old pool ordinance.

"The old ordinance was contradictory and confusing. In some cases it was burdensome and lax, in certain areas," said Ald. Alan Abrams (8th). The re-writing of the ordinance was prompted after a 7-year-old boy drowned in an abandoned Des Plaines private pool, Abrams said.

"The city has the power to shut down a pool if it is in violation of the ordinance, especially in the case of a serious danger. The city always had the power, but now it can be shut down more quickly."

"CHUCK HUG did an awful lot of work gathering information from other suburbs on their pool ordinances," Abrams added.

The reason the health department and City Engineer Robert Bowen, were included in the revision was, according to Abrams, "to offer more expertise with the inspections."

Jean Branding, director of the health department, said "We have not received any notice from the building department on helping to issue any permits. If we receive a complaint we'll check it out."

Bowen's immediate reaction when told drawings and plans for installation of any Class A Swimming Pool (more than 18 inches in height) are supposed to be submitted to him for inspection was: "They are?" Bowen said his job would most likely involve the checking of the pool filter's working capacity to the volume of water in the pool.

Citizens Action Program grows

Pressure group nucleus forming here

by DOROTHY OLIVER

A northwest suburban chapter of Citizens Action Program (CAP), a Chicago-based people pressure group, is being formed in Des Plaines.

About 200 Des Plaines residents joined CAP during its two-week canvass recently and currently are being contacted to organize the local chapter.

"We are still in the very beginning stages," said Tobey Mallicksen, CAP organizer. "We are contacting people, letting them know of their mutual existence."

CAP is trying to establish local leadership for this chapter as they do for others. Although the group is strongest in Chicago, they do have an active chapter in Waukegan and Oak Park, 70 members in Elk Grove, new members in Northbrook and are currently canvassing in Buffalo Grove.

CAP WORKS on the principal of "people power." They go out, several hundred members strong, and take on the biggies:

- They are demanding a 50 per cent cut in senior citizen's telephone bills and have picketed AT&T stockholder meetings.

- They are protesting in the Illinois General Assembly asking for a freeze on tax levies.

- They are opposing Commonwealth Edison's bid to increase electric bills by 12 per cent.

- They've attempted to confront the president of Jewel Companies Inc. to demand a rollback in prices.

CAP IS BEST known for its opposition to Chicago's cross-town expressway, a third airport in Lake Michigan and unfair Cook County assessment practices.

"CAP has done things for people in the suburbs," said Joe Perilli, canvas director. The group has forced pollution control by the Metropolitan Sanitary District, Commonwealth Edison and U. S. Steel, doubled senior citizens property tax rebates and forced reassessments of race tracks, steel mills and offices, he said.

Last year CAP charged that Woodfield Mall, Schaumburg, Randhurst Shopping Center, Mount Prospect, and Arlington Park Race Track, Arlington Heights, were drastically underassessed. The group urged special reassessments of the properties but none were taken.

Knife-wielding bandit robs third store

A third Des Plaines grocery store armed robbery this week occurred Wednesday when a store manager was forced to hand over $100 in cash to a youth who threatened him with a knife, police said.

Des Plaines police believe the same man is responsible for all three holdups.

The latest victim, Mendel Kleinlerer, 54, of Chicago, manager of the Convenient Food Mart at 1703 Oakton St., told police the man had a knife in his hand when he entered the store shortly before 9 p.m.

Police said the bandit walked up to Kleinlerer, who was behind the counter, and ordered him to empty the cash register. The robber fled east down Oakton Street on foot.

THERE WERE no witnesses to the robbery. Kleinlerer described the man to police as 5'10" tall, 160 pounds with blond hair.

A similar description of the bandit was given to police following the two previous holdups.

A 7-Eleven food store, 810 S. Elmhurst Rd., was robbed of $50 Tuesday at knifepoint by a youth. The first robbery occurred Monday at a 611 W. Golf Rd., 7-Eleven store when a bandit fled with $100 cash.

In the first two cases, police said the holdup man spent several minutes inside the store looking at magazines before announcing the robbery.

According to police Lt. Lee Alfano, "the similarity of the descriptions makes us believe the holdup man was the same in all three robberies."

Police are following up several leads but are withholding details.

Will Mr. Steak become Mr. Egg?

Disappointment is setting your sights on a rib eye sandwich at the local steak house, and when you get there, finding that an egg salad sandwich has top billing on the menu.

When Henry Cantrell kids about serving egg salad or ham salad at his Mr. Steak restaurant in Des Plaines, he's not laughing. It was Wednesday night when he heard the president of the Mr. Steak chain, James Mather, say on television that the company outlets would begin shutting down unless more beef supplies become available.

"The newscast caught as many Mr. Steak owners in the Chicago area by surprise as anybody else," Cantrell said. "By this Friday, he said we'd be out of supply."

Nobody had to tell Cantrell and the owners of 14 other Mr. Steak outlets in the Chicago area about a beef shortage. The price freeze on beef has dried up some sources of supply in the Chicago area as well as shipments coming from the company's Denver, Colo., operations. "I talked to some of them (suppliers) yesterday, and they said they have enough for another week, maybe two," Cantrell said. "Past that point, we don't know..."

HIS MANAGER, Jim Reedy, said most meat processing companies predict they'll be out of beef supplies within a week and a half. A Saturday meeting in Oak Brook is slated by the Mr. Steak owners in the Chicago area, to decide whether to cut down on the days they're open for business, or to continue business as usual until they run out of beef.

"We're just going from week to week right now, buying as much as we can get," said Tom Rogers, manager of the Mr. Steak restaurant in Wheeling. "There's plenty of beef, but nobody wants to sell it at a low price."

The Wheeling restaurant is still receiving beef shipments out of Denver. Some local supplies have been cut off due to the shortage. One of the local suppliers is Arlington Packing Co. in Arlington Heights.

"We're also canceling 60 to 70 home freezer orders this week," said Chuck Myers, an employee at Arlington Packing. He said customers are notified that beef supplies won't be available until after the price freeze is lifted on Sept. 12. Spot shortages of pork and chicken are still a problem.

THE PHASE IV program announced July 18 by President Nixon lifts the price ceilings on all food items except beef. The only costs which can be added at this point are agricultural increases. On Sept. 12, the beef price ceiling will be lifted and additional cost increases may be added in to the food prices.

Bruce Butterfield, a spokesman for the American Meat Institute, said the announcement of critical beef shortages by the Mr. Steak executive followed an industrial meeting held in Chicago on Wednesday. More than 100 people in the beef industry participated in the session.

"We're locked into an intolerable situation, because packers cannot buy beef at prices for which they can sell it," Butterfield said.

Butterfield concedes that some beef producers are probably holding back their supplies until the ceiling is lifted. "But some of the indicators of long range supplies are not very favorable, either," he said. The number of cattle being placed in feed lots in the second quarter of this year was down 11 per cent from the same quarter in 1972.

AS SOON as the price ceiling is lifted, beef prices will climb, he added. Turning around the outlook toward greater beef supplies "will take some time," he said, and prices will not level off until then.

A 15 to 20 per cent boost in beef prices will probably show up as soon as the prices are allowed to fluctuate, predicts Sidney Jaffe, president of Frigid Meats, Inc., in Chicago. He says the price could even double on some items, but it's hard to predict at this point how far the prices will climb. A leveling off in prices will follow as supplies increase, he said.

Jaffe's company processes half a million pounds of beef a week. His customers are restaurants and other commercial outlets in this Chicago area, including Bonanza and Ponderosa steakhouse restaurants.

"We have enough supply to last two weeks," Jaffe said yesterday. He buys from approximately 150 suppliers. "But if the freeze goes on three weeks from now, restaurants will shut down because they have no meat supplies," he said, adding that the administration's "enormous blunder" in maintaining the price ceiling on beef has caused disruptions all along the production cycle.

"ULTIMATELY, the farmer has to get off his butt and get into the field and raise cattle, and this takes time," Jaffe said.

Orville E. Melby, vice president and treasurer of the Bonanza International, Inc., was contacted at the firm's Dallas headquarters yesterday. "We hope we'll get through this period, but we're not without problems," he said. "It looks like at least until Sept. 12 we'll be all right, but we may have to innovate."

Melby has no estimate of how much the price for steaks will climb when the ceiling is lifted. The most popular items on the menu at the 360 Bonanza outlets are the sirloin, rib eye and top sirloin steaks, selling for $1.89, $2.39 and $2.69 respectively.

A number of housewives have written to Bonanza commenting that the restaurant prices have not increased as much as supermarket prices for beef. Melby believes the only way to level off beef prices would be to allow prices to increase for a time, an incentive for greater production.

Suburb expressway plan may be affected

Walker outflanked on Crosstown

by BOB LAHEY

The betting in Washington is that Chicago's Crosstown Expressway is alive and well, despite the vow of Gov. Daniel Walker that it will never be completed.

Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley succeeded in a legislative maneuver in Washington which would give the city authority to obtain federal funds for the Crosstown without the approval of the governor, and could foil Walker's plan to divert funds from the mayor's project for construction of a suburban expressway.

While the Crosstown and the suburban beltline expressway are two separate proposals, there is a possibility that Daley's legislative coup could adversely affect the suburban extension of Rte. 53, although that is far from a certainty.

Walker aides profess that they still have potential weapons to kill the Crosstown, though they are not being specific until the governor returns from his rest in Hawaii.

WALKER CLAIMED to have laid the Crosstown to rest on July 1, when he removed the Interstate Highway designation from the project, thus apparently blocking the possibility of obtaining federal funds for the $1 billion project.

Daley sprang an end-run on the governor, however, by having a rider attached to pending federal legislation which would enable the city to proceed with the Crosstown, with federal funds and without state approval.

Made a part of a House-Senate conference committee report on a three-year, $19 billion federal highway program was a provision authorizing federal aid for any road project which:

- carried Interstate designation as of June 30 (the day before Walker removed that designation from the Crosstown);
- lies wholly within the boundaries of a single municipality; and
- the entire city and state share of which will be paid for by the city alone.

AS FAR AS is known, the Crosstown is the only highway project in the nation which could meet those requirements, assuming that Mayor Daley is able to raise the $100 million local share of financing.

Conference committee reports must be approved by both the House and the Senate, and are not subject to amendment. So the only way the Crosstown provision could be killed would be to defeat the entire $19 billion highway program.

Langhorne Bond, Walker's state director of transportation and a Washington liaison man for the governor's office traveled to Washington Wednesday, ostensibly to seek changes in the conference committee report. However, an assistant to Rep. James Wright, D-Texas, explained that the conference committee had already approved the final report, and therefore was no longer in existence.

At a breakfast meeting with Illinois lawmakers and their representatives, the Walker aides concentrated on selling Walker's plea for a suburban expressway extending Interstate 90 and Route 53 into a beltline highway circling Chicago from Waukegan to Park Ridge and linking up with other expressways. Bond and his associate came to the meeting equipped with colored maps illustrating the effect of the highway in each of the congressional districts affected.

A SPOKESMAN in the state Department of Transportation confirmed that the application for 1974 federal highway money has been completed, substituting the suburban expressway project for the Crosstown, contained in previous applications.

One phrase in the conference committee report, expected to be passed shortly by the Congress, suggests the last-ditch hope of Walker for halting the Crosstown project. The report states that city highways meeting the requirements cited above may be built "by agreement" between city officials and the Secretary of Transportation.

That suggests that Secretary of Transportation Claude S. Brinegar could deny Mayor Daley the funds for the Crosstown.

Because of the dual authority to apply for the funds created by the conference

Two Blue Angels jets crash; 3 dead

Two supersonic F4J Phantom jets of the Navy's crack Blue Angels precision flying team collided in flight yesterday over a wooded area in Lakehurst, N.J., killing three of the fliers and injuring a fourth. Eyewitnesses said the accident occurred during a "looping stunt" involving all four planes.

Ceiling on beef to continue

Despite cattlemen's complaints and shortages of steak and hamburger in supermarkets around the nation, the administration said it will continue price ceilings on beef until Sept. 12. Agree on minimum wage bill House and Senate negotiators agreed on legislation raising the $1.60 hourly minimum wage to $2.20 next July 1 and extending coverage to an estimated 7 million additional workers. The bill was drafted under the continuing threat of a veto on the ground that a 37.5 per cent increase in the minimum wage in one year would be inflationary.

Senate acts on intervention, contributions

The Senate has approved legislation, inspired by ITT's political activities in Chile, that would forbid any U.S. citizen or government agency to seek to influence the outcome of an election on a foreign country. The Senate also voted to impose a $3,000 ceiling on the amount an individual can contribute to a presidential or congressional candidate in each election.

Spacemen: we'll live rent-free

CAPE KENNEDY (UPI) — Proclaiming themselves anxious to "go up there and live rent-free," the second Skylab astronaut team are making final preparations today before attempting man's longest stay ever in space.

If all goes as planned, the three will take off from Launch Complex 39 at 6:10 tomorrow morning aboard a Saturn 1B rocket. After achieving orbit, rendezvous maneuvers are to begin at 8:28 a.m.

Soviets aim for Mars

(From Herald news services)

For the second time in five days, Russia has sent an unmanned space ship toward Mars. The two new probes, Mars 4 and Mars 5, are now enroute on a trip that will take about six months. The Soviets, in announcing their first shots toward the red planet since 1971, gave no details, but the two 5-ton vehicles are presumably intended for a soft landing and electronic study on the planet's surface.

with actual docking scheduled at 2:40 in the afternoon.

Flying T33 jet trainers from Ellington Air Force Base near the manned spacecraft center in Houston, where the trio held final practice sessions, the team arrived at Patrick Air Force Base south of the launch site yesterday afternoon.

"Are you kidding? After training for two and a half years, you bet we're ready," mission commander Alan L. Bean said when someone asked if he and crewmates Owen K. Garriott and Jack R. Lousma were set to take over the $93 million orbiting Skylab.

They are scheduled to take up where the first Skylab team of Charles "Pete" Conrad, Joseph P. Kerwin and Paul J. Weitz left off June 22 after a 28-day stay aboard the 118-foot-long space station.

"We know Pete, Joe and Paul left the spacecraft in good shape and we're going to go up there and live rent-free for two months, and then we'll leave it for Jerry Carr, Bill Pogue and Ed Gibson," said Bean, talking about the third crew due to live aboard Skylab starting this fall.

Everything was running smoothly at Launch Complex 39, where ground crewmen resumed the Skylab countdown at 10 p.m. Wednesday. Some 1,900 pounds of special gear was stowed aboard the modified Apollo command ship, including a new sunshield to replace the one rigged outside Skylab by Conrad and his crew, and a complete backup set of gyroscopes to make sure Skylab stays properly aligned in its orbit.

Engineers monitoring conditions aboard Skylab, launched in May as the habitat for the initial 28-day living-in-orbit mission, reported it "looks good — there are no systems problems apparent." Today pressures in the laboratory will be raised to five pounds per square inch in preparation for the scheduled Saturday afternoon arrival and docking of mission commander Bean and his crewmates.

Nixon defies subpoenas

Constitutional battle joined

(From the Herald news services)

A constitutional battle unparalleled in American history has been set in motion by President Nixon's decision to ignore subpoenas demanding release of White House tapes of Watergate conversations.

The president, as expected, spurned the requests of the Senate Watergate committee and Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox for the tapes, and both immediately moved to obtain them by federal court order.

There's no question now that the issue will have to be resolved by the U.S. Supreme Court, and the president is predicting he'll be upheld as being right in his stand under the doctrine of the separation of powers.

The White House conceded that if the high court should rule against the president, he'd obey.

The next key date in the faceoff will be Aug. 7. By order of U.S. District Judge John Sirica, the White House has until 9 a.m. that day to show cause why it should not turn over the tapes.

Sirica, in whose courtroom the subpoenas were to be answered, set the date

POISED FOR LAUNCH on Complex 39 at Florida's Kennedy Space Center, this Saturn 1B rocket is scheduled to fire aloft at 6:10 tomorrow morning to carry three astronauts to a 59-day campout in Skylab. If all goes well, docking in space will take place at 2:40 in the afternoon.

Fourth day for Ehrlichman

From the Herald News Services

John D. Ehrlichman will return today for a fourth day of testimony before the Senate Watergate committee, after stirring skepticism among committee members yesterday.

The committee's decision to call back Ehrlichman will delay the much-awaited appearance of H. R. Haldeman, who was President Nixon's closest aide. He had been expected to begin testimony today.

The hearings will resume at 9 a.m. with live television coverage locally on Channel 5.

Ehrlichman insisted Thursday that it "didn't dawn on me" that a Watergate cover-up was under way in the White House. Some senators told him they just could not believe it.

The former close presidential adviser ran into skepticism from Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, and two other members, Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga., and Edward J. Gurney R-Fla.

"You mean to tell me," asked an exasperated Talmadge before a national television audience, "that you, as one of the highest officials in the land, sat there in the White House after authorizing the sum of $350,000 to pay for lawyers fees, ball bond and everything else on this cover-up, supremely ignorant that you were obstructing justice?"

And when Gurney raised the same point, saying the efforts of Herbert W. Kalmbach, Nixon's personal lawyer, and of John W. Dean III, Nixon's White House counsel, to raise money for the original defendants demonstrated "legal or illegal" White House involvement, Ehrlichman replied:

"I didn't feel any kind of a cover-up was going on at that time. It just didn't dawn on me."

In other portions of his testimony, Ehrlichman:

—indicated the Justice Department knew who would be indicted for the Watergate bugging as early as last July 31, six weeks before the indictments actually were returned, raising the possibility the case could have gone to trial before the presidential election.

—said it was constant pressure from President Nixon for information on Daniel Ellsberg that the FBI could not provide that led to formation of the White House "plumbers" group which broke into the office of Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

Nixon did offer to give the committee some documents "that can properly be made public" if the committee would ask for them specifically. Ervin said that was patently impossible.

"We are not clairvoyants, since we have never seen the documents," Ervin said.

Samuel Dash, the committee's chief counsel, will ask the court for a declaratory judgment that the President must comply with the committee's subpoenas for recordings of five conversations Nixon had with ousted White House counsel John W. Dean III and for all documents involving 25 past and present White House aides and campaign officials. Dash said the committee probably would go to court next Monday. Ervin said the case will be prepared carefully to avoid being thrown out in a technicality.

Instead of moving to quash the subpoenas, two from the Senate committee and one from Cox for nine tape recordings and assorted documents, the President chose in effect to ignore the subpoenas, although he explained his refusal to comply in separate letters to Ervin and Judge Sirica.

No one — even Nixon — doubted that the issue would have to be settled ultimately by the Supreme Court, which is in recess until Oct. 1. Some legal experts predicted the case could reach the court within 60 to 90 days, and that Chief Justice Warren E. Burger might be expected to call a special session if necessary to decide such an important constitutional issue. Nixon thus became the first President since Thomas Jefferson in 1807 to be subpoenaed — and the first ever to defy a subpoena.

Shooting suspect jumps his bond

Police are seeking a local man who failed to appear in court for a hearing yesterday after he had been charged last April with shooting an ex-girl friend.

Edward Klecka, 22, of 2845 River Rd., had been released on $15,000 bond after his April 19 arrest. He had been charged with aggravated battery and attempted rape.

Klecka was arrested by Des Plaines police after he allegedly shot the girl, 17, in the wrist after police said he also tried to rape her.

The girl ran into a bedroom and escaped through a window and ran to a neighbor's house where she notified police. She was later hospitalized with superficial gunshot wounds.

Klecka was still inside the house when police arrived. Several rounds of teargas were pumped into the house when the man disregarded public address calls to come out.

Gas explosion injures local man at worksite

A Des Plaines man suffered second and third degree burns when a pipe carrying natural gas exploded and started a fire at a Wheaton home construction site.

George Hayes, 30, of 2721 Des Plaines Ave., was admitted to Central DuPage Hospital, Winfield, in serious condition at 4 p.m. Wednesday. A hospital spokesman said he was in fair condition yesterday and the outlook for his recovery was "very good, favorable."

A Northern Illinois Gas Co. official said that Hayes was not a NI-Gas employee but was probably a construction worker working at the home at the time of the explosion.

Fire department and NI-Gas officials are investigating the cause of the explosion.

Hayes was one of four workers injured at the site.

Two plead guilty in shoplifting

Two Chicagoans were fined $100 each in Des Plaines branch of Cook County circuit court yesterday after pleading guilty to charges of theft.

Associate Judge James Maher ordered the fine for Thomas Foster, 43, and Sarah Foster, 36, both of 2014 Belden Ave.

The two were arrested after police said they tried to leave a K-Mart store, 1155 Oakton St., without paying for a $15.91 pair of boots. A pair of socks had been found inside the woman's purse.

Golden agers

by JUNE LANDMEIER

Summer is ageless and the older adults in Des Plaines are finding a wide variety of activities in which they may participate. The month of August offers the following schedule to men and women who reside within the Des Plaines Park District and are at least sixty years of age.

Aug. 3 — South Park — 7 to 9 p.m. — The John and Mary Club will meet for fun and fellowship. A warm welcome awaits those who are single at the present time.

There will be entertainment given by groups of children who participated in the Park District's summer programs. Actions, words, music, displays, etc. will be shared with the Golden Agers. This will be a "first" which should provide a joyful hour for all present. Refreshments will be served.

Aug. 10 — Lake Opeka — 7:30 p.m. — Maine West State Fair Band Concert. Bring a chair or blanket to sit upon.

Aug. 14 — Cubs Park — Members of the Des Plaines Police Dept. will again sponsor a trip to Cubs Park on this day. The buses will leave from City Hall at 11:00 a.m.; the second stop will be at South Park. All reservations are filled. Lunch will be served on the bus. An enthusiastic and grateful group of Golden Agers are looking forward to this great day.

Aug. 16 and 17 — Trip to Illinois State Fair and New Salem.

Aug. 23 — Annual Seniors' Picnic —

West Park — 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. — Fun and fellowship with members of organizations in five different towns. Bring a box-lunch; beverage will be sold. A square-dance caller will come with the Mt. Prospect Extentioneers. Anyone who plays an instrument is welcome to bring it and entertain those who are present. Perhaps your grandchildren would like to perform magic-tricks, calisthenics, dances, or whatever.

Aug. 24 — West Park — Talent Night — Golden Agers and their families are encouraged to share their talents on this evening. Singing, dancing, showing and talking about hobbies, and/or crafts, playing instruments, etc. should make this a memorable evening. Participate or observe — but do come and enjoy.

Aug. 26 — West Park — 3 to 4:30 p.m. — a special meeting for those who plan to visit Hawaii.

Burglars steal AM-FM radio from church

Burglars forced their way into the Trinity Lutheran Church, 675 Algonquin Rd., late Tuesday and stole an AM-FM radio and speakers valued at $150, Des Plaines police said.

The burglars also had ransacked a church office during the break-in, police said.

Child development center planned for Oakton College

A child development center is planned for Oakton Community College during the 1973-74 academic year, which begins Aug. 27.

The center will be open to children between the ages of three to five. Priority will be given to children of Oakton students, faculty and classified staff. If space is available, children from the community will be accepted.

The center will offer four sessions on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m., and from 12:30 to 3:30 p.m. and on Tuesday and Thursday from 8 to 11:30 a.m. and from 12:30 to 3:30 p.m.

Fees have been established at $18 monthly for the Monday, Wednesday, Friday sessions; and $12 monthly for the Tuesday, Thursday sessions. If a child attends for the entire day, a parent will be billed for two sessions. There is no provision for a lunch program for these children.

Children can be registered for the program in Room 628, Building No. 6, from 10 a.m. to noon and from 2 to 4 p.m. daily. Children will be required to have a physical examination by their physician and must be toilet trained.

Opening date for bids changed

The opening date for the bids on the Des Plaines Civic Center, city hall building, has been extended to Aug. 10 at 3 p.m., according to City Clerk Eleanor Rohrbach.

All other conditions of the bidding procedures remain the same, she said.

Parks 'leadership' program gives kids more attention

by REGINA OEHLER

"Increased Leadership" at the Des Plaines Park District doesn't really teach leadership; it means there are more park district leaders working with every child.

Park District Supt. of Recreation Dave Markworth said leaders can give children more personal attention and develop each child's creativity and sports abilities.

Open to children from 4 to 10, the program includes arts and crafts, sports and, for the little ones, singing and finger games.

LEADERSHIP IS held six hours a day, twice a week, at six parks around the city. Markworth said the park district decided children would get more out of a six-hour program twice a week, than a one or two-hour daily program.

"It's more concentrated," he said. Increased Leadership has been in existence for two years, and there are approximately 300 children enrolled.

"The response from the parents has been very satisfactory," Markworth said.

THE OBJECT of the program is to help the child be more successful in school, said Betsy Zombres, recreation supervisor. The method is to get children used to working with each other and to teach them some basic techniques in both sports and arts.

Bob Phillips, director of the West Park Increased Leadership program, said the sports develop a certain amount of manual skill and motor coordination. Phillips is a teacher at Orchard Place School during the rest of the year.

"We're not obliged to make children do anything," Phillips said. "I enjoy it. I wish I could teach this way," he added.

Children appear to enjoy the program too. One girl said she liked the activities and "It's better than staying at home, doing nothing."

Another boy said he liked the park district activities much more than his swim class.

Other children were too absorbed in staining a large wooden key to talk. The key was to become a key holder.

EACH INCREASED leadership group is divided into three groups — Pollywogs, Tadpoles and Sports and Campcrafts. Pollywogs are children aged 4 to 6. Tadpoles are first and second graders and Sports and Campcraft is composed of third and fourth graders.

Each group is involved in different activities.

The Sports and Campcraft children spend their last day at Camp Opeka, practicing outdoor skills and learning how to canoe. All the children will be going to a kaleidoscope center in Arlington Heights where they will learn to create things from everyday types of materials, such as plastic, cardboard and paper.

"I think it shows the children a new realm," said Miss Zombres.

50% decline in teaching jobs seen here this fall

Fifty per cent fewer new teachers will begin teaching in Elk Grove Twp. School Dist. 59 this fall than in years past.

The process of teacher selection hasn't changed, nor has the number of classroom teachers (540) employed by the district. Assistant Supt. Albeon Waltman attributes the decrease in need for new teachers to the economy of the times.

"Jobs are scarce and this cuts the mobility of teachers down. They are not as eager to leave a secure teaching position because they might not find another. At least that's what I believe," Waltman said.

Fifty new teachers were hired by the district for the fall, compared to 80 new teachers hired last year and about 100 new teachers that have been hired in years prior to 1972.

ALL OF the teachers new to the district have graduated with bachelor degrees in education, mostly from Illinois universities. A minority of the new teachers have graduated from private universities or those outside the state, or with degrees beyond a bachelor's.

"It's mainly because most people choose to attend state universities and most of our applicants are from Illinois originally," Waltman said.

Even with many new teaching techniques and practices being used in area elementary and junior high schools, the criteria used to evaluate teaching candidates has remained the same over the years.

Before being interviewed by the assistant superintendent of the district and principals and staff members of the school, a candidate's teaching certificates and qualifications are checked by the district office.

AFTER MATCHING the teaching candidate with the district's staffing needs, the candidate is interviewed and evaluated on the basis of appearance, communication, teaching methods and attitudes, intelligence and classroom management.

The school principal's evaluation after an interview with a candidate is the actual deciding factor.

"We rely heavily upon the principals and teachers in each school and their judgment in choosing what is best for the children under their care. Each school's principal and his staff must work as a team and develop their own personality towards education within the framework of the district," Waltman said.

WALTMAN feels that the screening and evaluation process used by the district for its 16 elementary and 5 junior high schools is adequate and effective and similar to the teacher selection process in other area districts.

The district still looks for highly competent educators who have met the teaching qualifications specified by the state.

"We expect them to be well aware of the many facets of education and, in return, the district is able to give them the teaching conditions that are desirable for education," Waltman said.

Applications accepted for machinists plan

Applications for admission to the machine technology apprenticeship program being offered for the first time this fall at Oakton Community College are now being accepted.

Students in the program receive instruction in crafts such as machinist, tool and die maker or mold maker. They will also receive on-the-job training in local industries where they will be placed by the college.

Students who complete the two-year certificate program will be qualified as general machinists. Those completing a four-year program will become journeymen with specialized skills.

The program meets the requirements of the U.S. Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training. Classes for fall term begin Aug. 27. Information is available at the Oakton admissions office, 7900 N. Nagle, Morton Grove.

Drop charges against ex-alderman

Charges of threatening police officer with a machete were dropped Thursday against a former Des Plaines alderman in Des Plaines branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

Reinhardt Wolf, 77, of 1442 Ashland Ave., had been charged with unlawful use of a weapon along with leaving the scene of a property damage accident and improper lane usage following his arrest April 22.

Associate Judge James Maher fined Wolf $100 on the two traffic violations.

According to police reports, Wolf had threatened to use the machete on patrolman Walter Lang. Lang had gone to Wolf's home to investigate an accident after witnesses told police Wolf's car had struck two parked autos along Ashland.

The witness, James Aquilla, 1611 Ashland Ave., told Lang when he arrived on the scene that Wolf had gone into his house following the accident.

Wolf was arrested after Lang knocked the machete from Wolf's hands. Lang said the man balked at several requests to put down the machete.

Whose responsibility?

any class "A" or "B" pool; an operation permit must be obtained from the building department and health department, according to the ordinance.

Class "A" swimming pools shall be enclosed on all sides by the principal building, an accessory building, or by a fence or other approved enclosure at least five feet high, the ordinance states.

Prickett said the two major concerns for inspecting the pools are the fences and the location — avoiding placing any pool under or too close to power lines.

The fee for a class "A" or "B" pool is $10. No fee for an operational permit has been established.

People owning swimming pools are usually encouraged to increase their homeowner liability insurance for a precaution against any possible accidents.

The swimming pool ordinance covers many aspects of ownership and operation and even a clause for the guy next door: No swimming pool shall be so operated or maintained as to interfere unduly with the enjoyment of property rights by occupants of property adjoining the pool or located in the neighborhood.

Leaves wallet with $50 in restaurant

A wallet containing $50 in cash was stolen Tuesday from the counter of a local restaurant where a local man had left it, Des Plaines police said.

Thomas Kramer, 10 E. Terrace Ln., told police he was leaving McDonald's, 725 Golf Rd., when he remembered leaving the wallet on a counter inside.

Police said the wallet was gone when the man went back to retrieve it.

Come to Where the Choice Is

THIS IS THE SITE of the proposed $20 million O'Hare Sports Arena which will be the home of the Chicago Cougars Hockey Club, a Team Tennis franchise and an unnamed American Basketball Association team. The view is from the Sheraton-O'Hare Hotel in Rosemont, which is just south of the 35-acre site. Rosemont officials will sell general obligation bonds to acquire the site.

OFFICIALS CONNECTED with the new stadium say they will have lavish facilities for both the fans and press. They are particularly striving to provide good sight lines in which to view sports or other events.

Though architects will be screened today for the job of designing the arena, Cougar and Rosemont village officials say they have a good idea of what they want the stadium to look like, above.

Cougars make it rain dollars in Rosemont

by BARRY SIGALE

If the old adage that it takes a buck to make a buck is true, then the grandiose plans to build a major sports stadium in Rosemont and stock it with professional teams will have a resounding effect on both the economy and lifestyle of the suburbs.

There are dollar signs popping up all over the place. Owners of the World Hockey Association's Chicago Cougars are throwing them around. Benefiting from this is the village of Rosemont, the business community surrounding O'Hare Airport and the average suburban sports fan.

Just this week, the Cougars announced they were making Pat Stapleton that team's first millionaire player-coach. But there is more importance to this development than the simple raiding of the rival Chicago Black Hawks.

Investing an estimated $1 million on Stapleton for five years work is a mere pittance when compared with the staggering financial gains that certainly will be made by everyone connected with the building of the new arena.

THE COUGARS and Rosemont officials expect a high return on their investment — the recently announced $20 million O'Hare Sports Arena complete with super luxuries. Construction will begin in a few months with a possible completion date of late 1974.

Here are some of the figures tossed around by those close to the development of plans for the new stadium, which will be used for professional hockey, basketball and tennis, conventions and special shows.

According to the best estimates, the arena may be in use every day of the year. Assuming that the average ticket for all events would cost somewhere around $4.50 and further assuming that all 18,000 seats would be filled for each event, owners of the Cougars, as lessees of the stadium, would gross $244 million a year. About half that amount will be made by concessions, making potential annual gross of $366 million.

If taking those same figures but cutting the total attendance in half, to about 9,000 persons, the gross to the team would be $122 million a year. Add to that the monies earned from concessions, $183 million is the potential income if based on 9,000 attendance.

This is only gross income, of course. Out of that would come rent on the stadium (to Rosemont) and expenses for the teams owned by the lessees. Then comes the profit.

ROSEMONT STANDS to make a financial windfall from the use of the stadium. It will own the building, collecting rent, taxes on tickets, parking, sales, utilities and real estate and a portion of the profits to be determined. All that adds up to about $2 million a year, a guestimate that runs close to the figures envisioned by village officials.

Details are still being worked out between the Kaiser brothers, Jordon and Walter, owners of Kaisers Sports Centers International, and Rosemont officials, led by Mayor Donald E. Stephens.

Under the preliminary agreement, the Kaiser firm, which owns the Cougars and a World Team Tennis franchise, will operate and manage the arena, sub-leasing and renting other events and activities into the stadium with the OK of the village.

The stadium is expected to send favorable economic waves throughout the business community, especially for surrounding hotels and restaurants, and give the suburban fan teams to see and cheer something that has become increasingly difficult to do with the Black Hawks and the Chicago Bulls.

The Black Hawks are fast becoming the Cougars' foremost fan club — providing them and the WHA some valuable players, including Stapleton and the great Bobby Hull. And, as the latest rumor has it, Stan Mikita soon will join the Cougars.

WITH STAPLETON (and possibly Mikita) it assures the Cougars of challenging for league honors next year and the next and promises to have a drastic effect on the team's slim attendance figure.

This stadium plan here to make good on their promise to bring a professional basketball team to the new stadium. Since the Bulls represent the National Basketball Association, it would mean moving an existing American Basketball Association franchise to Chicago.

Before any of these plans come to fruition, however, there remains the business of purchasing the 40 to 50 homes and apartments on the 35-acre site located just north of the Sheraton-O'Hare Hotel on Mannheim Road.

The village will issue general obligation bonds, estimated at about $3 million worth, for site acquisition. Then, revenue bonds will be sold by the village to pay off the general obligation bonds and the remainder of the estimated $17 million for the actual construction of the arena. Therefore, the village is not responsible if the teams go bankrupt or for any other reason have to vacate the stadium. The Kaisers would be held liable.

After the bonds are paid off, usually in a time span of about 40 years, the village would earn about $500,000 more per year. The village will do so well, said Stephens, half-joking, half-serious, it might be able to eliminate all local taxes.

"THE FINAL LEASE must include a guarantee of payment of all principle and interest on the revenue bonds," Stephens said. "We want a guarantee from every team that uses the stadium, from the Kaisers and the leagues for the length of the revenue bonds."

In doing so, Stephens is trying to protect against the jumping of any of the teams to another city and leaving their bills behind them. City-hopping is a common occurrence in the sports world. Even so, Stephens knows major sports teams need Chicago and, in particular, Rosemont.

But Rosemont wasn't the first choice of the Cougars, who presently play at the Chicago Amphitheater, and it took Stephens' initiative to bring the Kaisers away from the negotiating tables with the village of Palatine.

"They didn't come to us, we went to them," Stephens, mayor for 12 years, said of his initial contact with the Cougars. "We were looking into building a convention center there. People there wanted to rezone, to get the hell out of there. They were having flooding and noise problems because of a flight pattern to O'Hare."

"The convention center idea fell through and we began talking about what public use we could make of it (the site) when we noticed the Cougars were talking to Palatine. It made more sense to us for them to come here. I asked them if

AS WITH ANY other major project, they were interested and they said yes." There are several problems which will

Though there are three expressways — come along with the new arena. The Northwest Tollway, Kennedy and Tri-State Tollway — feeding into Rosemont, motorists coming to the site along the Northwest route may run into difficulties.

While the other two expressways offer exit ramps near the stadium, there is no such exchange off the eastbound Northwest Tollway.

Stephens said he is trying to convince the Illinois Tollway Authority to build an exit at River Road to accommodate traffic from the Northwest suburbs. He said he would tell officials the exit would pay for itself through the increased use of the expressway. Otherwise, Rosemont could build the exit with money from the bond issue. If the exit isn't built, eastbound traffic would have to use Touhy Avenue or other major streets.

The increased traffic in the airport area would necessitate the need to double the Rosemont Police department, Stephens said. The village would also have to make improvements to prevent the area from flooding. It is not a flood plane, according to Stephens, but Willow Creek overflowing that is causing all the problems.

HE SAID THE lighted parking lots and increased police protection would not result in an increase in crime with the construction of the stadium.

Another, but less serious problem, has to do with height regulations imposed by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). The FAA, according to Stephens, requires that a building not exceed 68 feet in height. Though the architectural firm which will design the building has not been chosen, Stephens said he is certain the arena will meet those requirements.

The stadium is in line with a runway but Stephens, an amateur pilot himself, said the arena's close proximity to O'Hare makes it less dangerous than other sites.

"As a pilot, I know that the closer you are to a runway, the better off you are. The pilot is already committed (to land), he knows where he's at, he can see the runway."

JORDON KAISER, chairman of the board of Sports Centers International, is certain the teams using the arena and the other attractions to be held there will prove successful immediately upon completion of the building.

"We didn't go into this thing with a wish and a prayer," Kaiser said. "The Chicago market for hockey is tremendous. It's an unfulfilled market and if we can keep prices down, we can do good."

"What is happening on the American scene is that there is more disposable income and people have more time. There is a need for recreation. Hockey and football satisfy the contact interest, although football is limited in its season. Hockey has brutality, the quick action of basketball and the suspense that occurs in a few other sports."

Wanna buy the Oakland A's?

Want to buy a professional basketball franchise? How about a hockey team? Or a world champion baseball club? Or an insurance business? Or a farm?

Those offers came in a nice, neat package yesterday from Charles O. Finley, better known as Charlie O. Finley, the controversial, flamboyant, sports entrepreneur, in a telephone conversation with the Herald.

Finley was asked whether he would either sell or move his Memphis franchise of the American Basketball Association to Chicago and the proposed O'Hare Sports Arena.

"Do you want to buy them?" he asked his inquirer, making one wonder if he stops every one on the streets of Chicago, where his offices are located, and tries to hustle his team.

Then he added emphatically, "I'm not interested in bringing my team to Chicago. One team in Chicago (the Bulls) is plenty. Even one team is too much." Finley doesn't agree with ABA officials that Chicago is a key city into which that league must expand. "Those SOB's don't know a goddamn thing," he said.

Then came his offer to buy his other interests. "If you've got a million dollars you can have the basketball team," he ranted. "You can have the (California Golden Seals) hockey team, too. You can even have the baseball team (the world champion Oakland Athletics) for $15 million. I'll even sell you my insurance business. Yes, my farm, too." He didn't mention his famous mule, though, and obviously wants to keep him.

"I'm damn fed up with this world," the eccentric businessman cackled. "I just listened to the Watergate hearings for half an hour. Life's just not worth living."

Kaiser pointed to successes in other hockey towns in both the WHA and national Hockey League and said, "when you talk about markets and futures you begin to see the reasoning that goes into this (decision)."

HE ADDED THAT there is a good chance the ABA will locate a basketball team in the new arena and took a poke at rival owner Arthur Wirtz, whose Black Hawks and Bulls play at the Chicago Stadium.

"The location of the Chicago Stadium is a detriment to the Bulls," Kaiser said, referring to the crime-ridden Madison Street area. "People would rather not go there. Since suburban high school basketball does good, an ABA team would be an instant success, especially if it's a good team."

While Kaiser pulled his punches, somewhat, when referring to Wirtz, Stephens was more emphatic about the multi-millionaire and personal friend of Mayor Daley.

"Wirtz has a virtual monopoly," Stephens said. "He owns the Stadium and the Black Hawks and has part control of the Bulls. This guy's having a ball down there." Stephens said Wirtz doesn't have to pay rent, unlike the arrangements the Kaisers have with Rosemont. "Now figure out what Wirtz is making. It would shock the hell out of you."

BECAUSE WIRTZ has what Stephens called a virtual monopoly on some Chicago sports, fans have been angered because of certain policies that have made it increasingly difficult to see the Hawks and Bulls and even the addition of 10,000 seats at the Chicago Stadium won't make any difference.

"Even if I had nothing to do with Rosemont I would go to the new arena to see hockey and basketball," said Stephens who is, ironically, a Black Hawks fan with four season's tickets to prove it. "At Chicago Stadium there's poor parking, bad seats and it's in a bad neighborhood."

Stephens isn't worried, though, about losing his tickets, a valuable commodity since a lot of fans have to pay "juice," scalpers prices, to get tickets to Black Hawks games. He is certain to be first in line for tickets at the new arena.

"Chicago is the greatest sports town, with the possible exception of New York but with the worst facilities because of the unadulterated green of some of the owners. All it took (for a new stadium) was a municipality to do it."

THE NEW STADIUM will mean that more than 50 families will be displaced and have to find new homes. One resident, Mrs. Mary Glanzmann, 1025 Morse, has lived in Rosemont for 19 years. Most residents there have complained of flooding and airplane noise.

Herald editorial

The specter of censorship

In its attempt to meet the rising and often objectionable tide of blatant pornography which is flooding the country, the United States Supreme Court has abdicated too much to local control and thus opened the door to a dangerous potential for arbitrary censorship.

In its recent ruling on Miller vs. California, the Court, in a five to four decision, voted to change its 1966 standards for pornography and obscenity and said it is now up to local communities to set their own standards. The Court also removed the test of "utterly without redeeming social value" for pornography, the phrase under which most indecent material flourished since it is almost impossible to define the term "utterly."

Naturally, when the Supreme Court made its long awaited decision — and unexpectedly placed great powers with local governments — the arbitrators of social taste moved in. Magazines beginning with Playboy and its ilk as well as other, more prurient magazines were confiscated.

And therein lies the danger of this recent Court decision because it seems to us that the real issue here is not pornography at all but the specter of censorship.

With the inevitable hodgepodge of conflicting and arbitrary local laws which could result, the headlong rush to tear up dirty books could bruise or destroy marginal material which may offend some people but bother others not a bit.

As one writer put it, under the present Supreme Court ruling what is chaste when put in a mailbox in New York could be considered objectionable when it is opened in another state.

There is no question that hard core pornography should be controlled in some form by the rule of law. In every case, hard core material should be kept out of the hands and minds of children and the sale of it should be done demurely and unobjectionably to the uninterested passerby. Stiffer, not lighter penalties to these offenses should be the rule.

But beyond those restrictions, the fragile borders between blue-nose censorship and legitimate social and political expression are too easily encroached upon; in short, the elimination of pornography is not worth serious damage to the provisions of the First Amendment.

Two views on this question are now before us from local prosecutors and lawmakers:

Cong. Philip Crane (R-10th) hailed the Supreme Court ruling a victory for those who fear the moral state of the nation. Crane sees much harm in sexually explicit material — no matter who reads it.

Republican Cook County State's Attorney Bernard Carey, on the other hand, has a far more reasonable and intelligent approach. Carey said he will continue to prosecute cases where pornography is inflicted on an unwanting public, but, he said, "we must be mindful that there are inherent dangers in undertaking to regulate any form of expression."

ment in the case will be rendered not in the courts but by a jury of public opinion.

Lawyers for the Senate Watergate Committee appeared at the Executive Office Building next door to the White House Monday and in a "very friendly" half-hour session with Leonard Garment, Nixon's chief counsel, served subpoenas ordering the President to produce documents and tapes of his conversations concerning the Watergate case.

THE PROCEDURE was a formality. Nixon already has said he will not comply on grounds that this would set an unacceptable precedent of Presidential accountability to the Congress which would make it difficult for all future Presidents to operate.

And the Senate appears unlikely to take the case to court, leaving that chore to Archibald Cox, the special Watergate prosecutor investigating criminal aspects of the case, who also was denied access to the documents.

The Senate already has a forum for presenting its case. Tales of illegal political intrigue, efforts to corrupt the Democratic process, attempts to subvert independent government agencies and other misuses of presidential power have been flowing into millions of homes for several weeks now.

Nixon's task in the battle is not only to convince the public he is personally innocent of complicity in the wrong-doing.

HE MUST ALSO convince people his decision not to divulge recordings that could clear the suspicion hanging over him is based on a genuine concern about the constitutional prerogatives of his of-ice and is not an attempt to hide his own involvement.

The Watergate already has shifted the balance of power sharply toward the Congress. Nixon was said by his aides to be dedicated now to halting the swing.

They described him as angry at what he considers the excesses of the Ervin committee and poised to counterattack. His plan goes something like this:

—Discredit the Senate committee for going beyond legitimate legislative inquiry and engaging in character assassinations and political witch-hunts.

—Emphasize that the committee's inquiry and the attendant publicity will make it virtually impossible for justice to be done in the criminal prosecutions that will follow.

—Minimize the significance of the Watergate affair in terms of the problems and opportunities that face the nation and need a strong executive to deal with.

WHITE HOUSE officials no longer keep up the fiction that business is proceeding normally in the Oval Office. They privately concede that the President's staff is disheartened and work has come virtually to a standstill. (UPI)

Our readers write:

'Overpriced' labor adds to woes of U.S. economy

I would like to present my views on the economic problems of this nation, including President Nixon's wage and price controls.

I hope this letter will stimulate other letters on this subject, as I would like to read viewpoints other than those of professional writers. As inflation continues, I am sure that many people in this community, as well as myself, are becoming very concerned about being able to pay those bills.

I recently heard two professors of economics discussing this problem. They had viewpoints that were quite in opposition. Finally, one professor made what I thought was a most profound and honest statement. He said that almost any control that we impose on our economy will affect so many facets of the economy that it is almost impossible to determine whether that control was good or bad.

IN SPITE of that good observation, I would like to give my opinion as to what the problem is, and I also would like, to propose a cure.

First of all, it should be pointed out that the Number One reason for inflation is that our government is, and has been, spending more money than it receives — and to pay its debts, it merely prints more and more money. If our supply of currency and coin were fixed, we would surely have deflation.

Perhaps you have wondered who is getting all this money that we are spending? Is someone getting rich at our expense, and is someone getting more than a fair share of the fruits of our labor?

It has been my observation that business, both large and small, is not the culprit. We must not make the mistake of blaming all businesses for the unethical practices of a few. The large food chains, for example, make less than one cent on a dollar sale, after taxes. Their return on the invested dollar is about what one can get at the local bank.

OTHER BUSINESSES are so hard-pressed that they are forced to do much of their manufacturing in foreign countries, and this practice helps to put more and more people out of work. Today, too many people are not employed to their full capacity.

Who, then, is making the money? I hate to step on anyone's toes, but if you are lucky enough to belong to a labor union that really goes to bat for you, then you are probably making more money than you are really worth — and you know that there are many people who would just love to trade jobs with you.

For example, how would you like to deliver beer or soda for $30,000 a year? We should not begrudge anyone for doing well, but this success should be the result of determined effort and hard work. Today we can find many examples of occupations that are tremendously overpriced, and their good fortune is at the expense of everyone else's.

THE SOLUTION to this problem is that we should all have the opportunity to choose our occupations, and we should be allowed to compete for better jobs without having to pass money under the table to a union leader.

We should insist that the government stop printing fiat money.

We should return to the free enterprise system.

A bitter disappointment

July 29 was to have been the starting date of a trip my 16-year-old son had been looking forward to for a year. He and a friend were to leave on a bike trip which would take them to his grandfather's house in a little town in northern Michigan, right on the shore of Lake Superior. Last year they had ridden to Baraboo, Wis., and this year was to have been the big trip.

At 2:40 p.m. Thursday, July 19, when he entered the news agency at Campbell and Dunton, the plan was still in effect. At 2:45 p.m., when he came out of the store, it was no longer possible. The Schwinn Supersport bike, which he had worked so hard to get, was gone. One error on his part, not locking the bike, and all his effort and all his plans had completely evaporated.

SOMEWHERE in Arlington Heights there's a boy who feels he really scored big. By this time the bike he stole has probably been altered, serial number and accessories removed, maybe a new paint job, so it would no longer be recognizable. Possibly it has already been resold or maybe just abandoned in a patch of weeds.

True, this is no terrible tragedy. My son will survive, I'm sure. I'm also sure it is a very bitter disappointment to him. If I can direct an appeal to anyone it would be to the parents who see their son with a different bike and accept whatever explanation is offered. I can't help but feel that this apathy, misguided trust or whatever on the part of many parents is a contributing factor to the high rate of bicycle theft.

To whoever stole the bike, I can only say you have my sympathy. You are certainly headed in the wrong direction.

Farmer's lot is a risky one

Thanks Bob Lahey!

Having been raised on a farm, I certainly do appreciate your recent article, "Farmer's Life? Too unprofitable." You have really expressed the truth.

Both my parents' families have always been farmers. My parents have a total of eight brothers and sisters. Besides my parents, I have two uncles who are still on the farm and one who is just about to be forced off. Years ago my other uncles and aunts chose other occupations because farming was too hard. In my own generation there are 15. Only one of us was able to "get a start" in farming, and he went bankrupt after seven years of hard work and frustration.

I think very few people realize the amount of hard work, financial investment, and risk involved in farming. If current trends continue, I really wonder: Who is going to feed our nation?

A happy homeowner

Considering all the bad publicity Levitt Builders has been receiving, I'd like to give Campanelli a pat on the back.

A month ago we moved into our second Campanelli house. In our first Campy house, we did not have a repair in five years. In our new house, there were two minor repairs and within two hours the Campanelli crew had corrected the problem.

Dick LaSardo and the field office personnel are outstanding and pleasant people.

It's a joy to own a Campanelli house.

Driver exam unfair?

To Gov. Dan Walker:

A clipping from the newspaper of July 14, "Driver Exam Hurts Aged," seems to say something that should be considered for the improvement of the senior citizen's welfare.

As it now stands, it discriminates against a group that is least accident prone in their driving than, say, the 18 to 30 year old group. Besides, the cost of the license renewal every three years presents a great burden on a person being sustained mostly on Social Security. It curtails his need for a short relaxing drive taken mostly at times when the least traffic is moving.

IT IS NOT only the written test that bothers me, but we also are harassed by nit-picking of the examiners, mostly because we are naturally more cautious in entering a heavily-traveled street. Some will demerit you for entering too soon, while another examiner will demerit you for entering too slow. There does not seem to be a method of satisfying all of them, and you feel fortunate if you pass the test.

The news story indicates that Secretary of State Michael J. Howlett was requested to reconsider this part of the state driver's license requirement, and I do wish you will use your influence to help him make the proper adjustments to relieve this situation.

A reassuring stance

It is a sad and troublesome commentary to note the manner in which so many communities are responding to the Supreme Court's stringent ruling on obscenity. Censorship, witch hunts and imposition of a narrowly-defined morality seem to abound.

Therefore, it was reassuring to note the item in (July 22) Herald that our state's attorney, Bernard Carey, is approaching this issue with reason, caution and common sense. His warning that the court ruling is "not a signal for hasty or ill-considered prosecutorial or police action" is one that should be heeded by all our communities, and especially by those self-appointed vigilantes who seek to "protect" their conception of morality.

Editorial commended

I would like to commend you on your July 13 editorial entitled "Hospital should allow abortions." It was very well written, and you brought out all of the facts people should know. I hope that Northwest Community Hospital will reconsider its decision. I am going to write again today to Malcom MacCoun, president of the board at the hospital, and refer to your editorial.

Thank you for making your views known to the public on this very controversial subject.

NEW YORK — The consumer-oriented paperback book has become a favorite marketing tool of big companies.

Popular Library of New York, a subsidiary of Columbia Broadcasting System, dominates the business of producing such books. That's largely because of the efforts of Irving Settel, professor of marketing at Pace University in New York and project manager for Popular Library.

"These books are part of integrated marketing programs worked out for the companies that buy them and distribute them," Settel explained.

SPONSORS INCLUDE such firms as Westinghouse Electric, Hilton Hotels, Boeing, the National Apple Institute, Weyerhaeuser, Merck, Vita Foods, Maytag and The Savings and Loan Foundation.

The books all bear the sponsor's name, have some degree of direct selling in them as well as general information and most of them are sold on newsstands at standard prices. They also are given away free or sold at reduced prices with the sponsor's merchandise. They are written by recognized authorities, not by company promotion departments.

Among the more elaborate consumer-oriented paperbacks is the 224-page "Maytag Encyclopedia of Home Laundry," which sells on newsstands for $1.25, but costs home economics students only 60 cents. Buyers of Maytag washing machines get a free copy.

Managing your family's money

How much should you spend for food? It depends...

by MERLE E. DOWD

Question: "Each year we receive a bill for payment on Local Improvement District (LID) bonds sold to finance a sanitary sewer. Interest almost equals the principal amount. Is it good business to pay off the principal early to cut interest costs?"

Answer: Municipal bonds sold to finance the construction of schools, sewers, city and state projects draw very low interest rates. These rates are lower than you and I could arrange for one specific reason — interest on municipal and state bonds escapes federal income taxes.

You would save money by paying off any outstanding loans or installment debts before paying LID bond principal.

WESTINGHOUSE'S ENTRY is "The Betty Furness Westinghouse Cookbook." Blue Bonnet line offers elaborate cookbook.

The Savings and Loan Foundation's book is entitled "Managing your Money for Retirement" and it already has had two press runs of 1 million copies each.

The trend began in 1962, Settel told United Press International. "There always have been promotional books prepared internally by companies, and some companies have offered previously published books as marketing premiums," he said. "Benjamin Co. of New York does a substantial business in the book premium field."

WHAT POPULAR Library did was to tailor the consumer-oriented book to the sponsor's marketing needs but have it done outside the company by a professional author. The book must be good enough to sell on its merits as well as being used as a marketing tool.

The minimum order accepted is 100,000 copies. The plan of distribution must be such that the publisher and sponsor recover their costs from the initial press run.

Popular Library and the author also must be assured of a profit from the first run.

He said only two sponsors have canceled contracts in the 12 years Popular Library has been publishing such books.

Alcoholism care can be insured

A breakthrough in the treatment of alcoholism in Illinois was recently announced by the Kemper Group, a Long Grove-based insurance organization.

Coverage for alcoholism care will be extended in its group accident and health policies, James S. Kemper Jr., president of the firm, said. He is a member of the National Advisory Council on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. The new alcoholism treatment plan has been approved by the Illinois Insurance Department, and approval is pending in other states.

THE NEW benefits will cover outpatient alcoholism care at hospitals and all care by state-licensed alcoholism treatment facilities. Most group accident and health policies now restrict alcoholism coverage to in-patient hospital care.

Kemper said, "We expect that adding this coverage will, in the long run, reduce the cost of accident and health insurance. We know that we now pay a tremendous number of claims for a variety of illnesses which are nothing more than camouflaged alcoholism. This coverage should provide the financial means, for the first time, to detect and treat this disease early, avoiding far more expensive treatment in later stages of the disease."

Today, an alcoholic is only able to seek reimbursable care by going to a regular hospital for detoxification or for attention to medical problems resulting from his or her alcoholism, or by hiding the true illness. The new policy benefit will enable alcoholics to obtain reimbursable care — either in-patient or out-patient or both — at a treatment center designed to deal specifically with the problem.

UNDER THE alcoholism benefits package a person would be covered for such items as laboratory tests and X-rays, ambulance service, detoxification treatment and room and board for up to 35 days.

"These new benefits will provide much needed funding for alcoholism treatment in many types of facilities. This is especially important at a time when funds from foundation and federal sources — which have been the prime source of support for treatment centers — are drying up. But, in order for people in all states to benefit, state legislatures must establish guidelines and licensing criteria for treatment centers," Kemper said. He noted that only a handful of states presently have licensing procedures and expressed the hope that the new policy benefits would provide an incentive to other states to enact licensing laws.

A PRESIDENTIAL Commission recently reported that alcoholism is the number one drug problem in the United States, far outstripping any other drug, including heroin. Kemper said he expects that broadened alcoholism coverage in Kemper policies will set an example for the framers of national health insurance legislation.

The Kemper Group consists of stock and policyholder-owned companies providing most forms of insurance and a publicly held company, Kemperco, Inc., with 13 subsidiaries operating in such field as insurance, reinsurance, mutual funds, consumer finance and safety consulting.

Des Plaines alderman opposed

Villages support MS plant

Village officials from Arlington Heights, Mount Prospect and Palatine pledged support for the Metropolitan Sanitary District's tunnel and reservoir plan yesterday, while a Des Plaines City alderman called for relocation of the O'Hare Water Reclamation Plant which is an integral part of the plan.

Ald. Richard Ward (8th) was the only speaker at a public hearing who opposed any part of the tunnel and reservoir plan — a system of underground tunnels and basins which would hold combined sanitary and storm sewage during heavy storms.

Ward spoke for 40 minutes and showed slides to back up his contention that a proposed 135-acre combined sewage reservoir adjacent to the O'Hare plant would give off foul odors and endanger the health of Des Plaines residents who live nearby.

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS Trustee Frank Palmatier, Mount Prospect Trustee George Anderson and Palatine Trustee Robert Goss praised the tunnel and reservoir plan as a much-needed solution to the problems of pollution and flooding from combined sanitary and storm sewers.

The local officials spoke at a Federally required public hearing to assess environmental impact of the plan before federal funding.

Ward urged that the combined sewage storage reservoir adjacent to the plant be eliminated or covered.

He cited a federal Environmental Protection Agency requirement that similar reservoirs in a residential section of Highland Park be covered by the North Shore Sanitary District.

WARD CRITICIZED MSD for failing to seek a better site for the O'Hare plant when it purchased the 103 acres at Elmhurst Road and Oakton Street in 1968. He told the district that two miles away a more desirable site was available in an unpopulated area outside MSD boundaries.

The Des Plaines alderman said prevailing winds in the area of the plant would carry odors into a residential area in the southwestern portion of the city which has been developed for 25 or 30 years.

Ward said the MSD was showing "ignorance and indifference" to the odor and health problems he said the plant would cause.

MSD OFFICIALS told that a separate public hearing would be required for the O'Hare plant itself before construction could begin. They said there also would be additional public hearings on each phase of the tunnel and reservoir plan before construction begins.

Sanitary District Supt. Bart Lynam said the EPA, as a rule, does not require combined sewage reservoirs to be covered. He attacked Ward's documentation that odors and disease would emanate from the treatment plant. "There is a greater health hazard in this room than in a sewage treatment plant," Lynam told the crowd at the public hearing.

MSD Trustees James C. Kirle said that the plant would not hurt Des Plaines "one iota." He said the plant would contribute to the growth of the Northwest suburbs.

TRUSTEE CHESTER Majewski said he believed the Northwest suburban area "needs a treatment facility desperately," although he said if odors do become a problem once the plant is built he will work to see that they are eliminated.

Palmatier, who represented Arlington Heights Pres. John Walsh, said the success of his village's $14 million flood control program "depends upon the construction of the deep tunnel system."

Anderson, who read a statement for Mount Prospect Pres. Robert Teichert, said individual municipalities "can at best provide only spotty relief and then only on a temporary basis."

Money!

'Sallie Mae' to provide students funds through stock sale to bonds, schools

Students trying to borrow money for their college or vocational school education should find the process easier this fall because of the efforts of the Student Loan Marketing Association (Sallie Mae), officials said yesterday.

Sallie Mae is a federally-sponsored private corporation which is patterned after Fannie Mae, the corporation which works in the area of housing mortgages. In a press conference yesterday in Chicago, officials of the new agency announced that they hope to raise $105 million through the sale of stock to banks and educational institutions by mid-August.

The $105 million will be used to back up the issuance of bonds and Sallie Mae will then be able to loan money to institutions which loan to students through the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, Edward Fox, president of the corporation, said.

BY LOANING money to organizations which loan to students and also by buying up outstanding student loans, Fox said, Sallie Mae will ensure a steady flow of cash which will be available for student loans.

Under the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, which began in 1965, students may borrow up to a total of $10,000 from banks and other lending organizations and do not have to begin repayment or to pay interest until after they are out of school and finished with military obligations. Repayment of the loans is guaranteed by the federal government.

Since the program began, students have taken out $6 billion in loans, Fox said, and the guaranteed student loan program has become the largest source of non-family support for college students.

Because of tight economic conditions and because the student loans are paid back over such a long term, Fox said, lending institutions recently have been running short of funds available for student loans. This spring and summer, the number of loans granted to students has been 45 per cent lower than the number granted at the same time last year, he said.

"STUDENTS who come in looking for loans find the financial institutions just don't have the funds," Fox said.

Fox said he was not sure how much money Sallie Mae would raise through issuing bonds during its first year of operation, but added that some estimates have run as high as $1 billion. "How much we raise will depend on the demand," he said. "I think we can be a meaningful factor this fall."

Between now and 1982, Fox said, Sallie Mae's debts will be insured by the Federal government. Under the law, the corporation will become entirely private by 1982.

Second Skylab team ready, anxious

by BRUCE E. HICKS

HOUSTON (UPI)—Alan L. Bean is a small guy with an insatiable appetite for spaghetti and a big desire to plan the next generation of explorers.

A balding, 41-year-old Texas native, Bean was the fourth man to walk on the moon in 1969, and a month later was grounded for 30 days for not getting a clearance to take off in his white T38 jet Skylab mission by his close friend and from Ellington Air Force Base.

Now he's going to leave the confines of earth's gravity again — for 56 days — to orbit the globe studying the sun, earth and man himself. His journey will give him the world's record for time in space, surpassing the mark just set on the first fellow moonwalker, Charles "Pete" Conrad.

BEAN, COMMANDER of the Skylab 2 flight, will work in the 116-foot-long space house and laboratory with rookie crewmates Owen K. Garriott and Jack R. Lousma.

Garriott, 42, a scientist-astronaut with a doctorate in electrical engineering, is married to the former Helen Mary Walker of Enid, Okla. They have four children — Randall, 18, Robert, 16, Richard, 12, and Linda, 6.

Lousma, 37, a husky former football player, and his wife, the former Gratia Kay Smetzer of Ann Arbor, Mich., have three children, Timothy, 9, Matthew, 7, and Mary, 4.

Bean and his beautiful blonde wife, the former Sue Ragsdale of Dallas, live in a $100,000 French provincial home in exclusive Nassau Bay, adjacent to the Johnson Space Center. The Navy captain said his wife and two children — Clay, 17, and Amy, 10 — don't mind his going away for a long period, but he plans to talk to them during his endurance flight.

"WE FEEL WE ought to operate up there like this is a longer duration space mission and try to understand how you live up there," Bean said in an interview. "If we were going to go up for two years, obviously we'd like to talk to our wives, our mother, our sister and several other people."

He plans to let his mind drift over all the living and working problems in the 100-ton space station during his visit and try to think of better ways to do everything, so the next generation of astronauts will have an easier time.

Efficiency is a key to Bean as a commander, say his crewmates.

"Al is one of the most easy-to-get-along-with guys I know, yet he's a hard driver, a hard charger," Lousma said. "He demands as much or more of himself as he does anybody else. Al is not only a good organizer, he's a good leader. He's a good motivator."

BEAN GREW UP in Fort Worth and enlisted in the Naval Reserve on his 17th birthday. He entered the University of Texas on a Navy Scholarship and majored in aeronautical engineering, receiving his commission through the Naval ROTC program. He also was on the wrestling and gymnastics teams.

At a gymnastics meet in Fort Worth, he met his wife, a member of the Dallas Athletic Club tumbling team. They married in April, 1953, the year Bean graduated. Later a test pilot, he turned down an offer to join the Navy's crack flying team, the Blue Angels, and applied with the space agency. He was accepted in the third group of astronauts in October, 1963.

LOUSMA, a Marine major, answered an ad in the military base newspaper at Cherry Point, N.C., and suddenly found himself a member of the elite space-men's corps.

"I thought I wouldn't have a chance to join the group, but I would kick myself forever if I didn't apply when I had the opportunity," he said. He was accepted in April, 1968.

The 6-foot, 165-pound, blond-haired pilot said he always was interested in science in school, but spent more time with athletics. A native of Grand Rapids, Mich., he played baseball and football at Ann Arbor High School, and football at the University of Michigan, where he received his aeronautical engineering degree. He later played baseball and football for the Marines, but now enjoys a relaxing golf game.

He met his wife at Michigan and they married between his sophomore and junior years.

His space companions say he's a big fellow, with a lot of drive.

"He has great perseverance and once he's started a job, he's not apt to let it drop," Garriott said. "he has a pleasant personality."

Bean said he's glad his husky crewmate is going along.

"When you want something done or the ground says go out (spacewalk) and fix something, I'd say let's send Jack out by himself and we'll wait inside and have a couple of drinks of coffee and we'll talk to him later."

GARIOTT SIGNED on with the first group of scientists to join the astronaut corps, evolving naturally into a job where he could do his research in his own environment.

He was an associate professor of electrical engineering at Stanford, involved in space agency satellite studies of the earth's ionosphere — the atmosphere 70 to 300 miles above the surface.

He learned to fly in 1960, getting his instrument rating and a jump on other scientists selected.

The third scientist-astronaut to go into space, Garriott said he's anxious to do the varied research on the station.

"I think it's a fascinating opportunity to be able to work in not just one, but three or four major disciplines, and to bring back data from a really unique environment," said the Enid, Okla., native.

THE 5-9, 140-pound, mustached pilot is also looking forward to the acrobatics and gymnastics the first Skylab crew proved could be done in the weightless home. He also plans to take a lot of photographs of earth's geographical features through the living quarters window in his spare time to help out other scientists on the ground.

Bean said Garriott never slows down on the ground.

"He has one pace," Bean said. "On his days off, he goes home and he works on a small computer, trying to learn how to work it, and he quits doing that and he goes over to the gym and runs and then he quits doing that and he goes and writes something about some scientific thing he's working on."

Lousma said Garriott also enjoys a quiet home life.

"Our temperaments are the same," Lousma said of the space trio. "We have worked together on this mission for two and a half years and I don't ever recall the time when we've had a cross word with each other."

It's us. Or rust.

You can bring your new car to Ziebart and we'll guarantee it against rust-through for 5 years or 50,000 miles. Our rustproofing process is that good. Of course, you can decide not to bring your new car to us, and wait for the rust spots to show. And that won't take very long.

Outdoor Getaway

A weekly series for the active family

DAD USES THE summer season to teach his boy the joys of hunting. Here, junior uses a Model 70 mounted with Weaver scope to take long range aim on a wood chuck.

Improve hunting skills during summer months

Summertime is generally a sad time for the avid hunter for it means that, for the most part, the hunting season is over and he must wait until fall before he can once again pursue his favorite sport. This is no reason for him to put his firearms in mothballs. In fact, this is the time of year for him to sharpen his shooting skills and to improve his marksmanship for the next hunting season.

There are many ways of doing this. Some hunters take up the claybird shooting games of trap and skeet; others keep their eyes sharp by plinking at paper targets or tin cans. Most hunters prefer to spend the off-season doing what they like best — hunting. That's right, hunting.

There are certain types of animals which are classified as vermin, or varmints, for which there are no seasons or bag limits. They are considered fair game all year long. Best of all, they are of such a variety that the taking of them can appeal to every type of hunter. The upland gunner can take his Model 1200 out to the fields and test his wing-shooting abilities on crows or magpies. The approach is much the same as duck shooting. Crows are best taken from a blind and are attracted by the use of crow call and decoys.

Along with the crow decoys, an owl decoy should also be used. Owls and crows are deadly enemies and if crows see an owl surrounded by two or three crows, they will swoop down to join the fight.

Rifle shooters can also keep in practice with summertime varmint shooting. Woodchucks, prairie dogs and coyotes provide challenging targets and, in some states, foxes and bobcats are considered varmint species.

These animals may be stalked with a 22 rim fire rifle or taken at long range with a scope-sighted center fire Model 70. When shooting at long range, however, since these animals are extremely small, it is advisable to take along a pair of high-powered binoculars for use in scanning the fields.

Rental centers aid beginners

If you're a beginner, renting is an excellent way to try out various types of gear before making any major recreational purchases. You can plan short trips, renting a tent from a rental center the first time.

It is also advisable to first check your state's hunting regulations as the species of animals that are declared varmints varies from one region of the country to another.

Wherever you live, there is bound to be good varmint hunting in your area and many opportunities to keep your shooting skills from cooling off during the hot summer months.

Northwest suburbanites needn't travel very far to escape into a world abundant with the luxurious growth of trees, flowers and shrubs. Within an hour's driving distance there are a number of public gardens and arboreta where you can view some of nature's bounties at their best. Here are four of the finest in the Chicago area.

Merrick Rose Garden in Evanston is a formal garden containing some 1,200 rose bushes. Each summer, when the roses come to full bloom, the garden comes alive with vivid color. A bubbling fountain, sitting amidst the 65 varieties of roses, adds to the garden's majestic display. Merrick Rose Garden is located at Oak and Lake Avenues in Evanston.

Garfield Park Conservatory, 300 N. Central Park in Chicago houses some of the most beautiful publically owned botanical gardens in the world. Six different "houses" contain 5,000 varieties and species of plants, providing a magnificent visual display for visitors. Each year the Conservatory schedules four different floral displays. They are the Chrysanthemum Show, the Christmas Show, the Azalea and Camellia Show and the Spring and Easter Show.

The numerous hot beds, cold frames and propagating houses allow the abun-

A car pulls over to the side of the road. The young woman next to the driver examines a road map and some papers. She also checks the car's mileage.

"Where are you going?" asks a man mowing a lawn nearby.

"I don't know," replies the young woman.

"Where have you been?"

"I don't know that either. In fact, I don't even know where I am now!"

The above is an oft-told story about car rallying, a pastime for thousands of people between 17 and 70 most weekends during the more pleasant months of the year.

Once exclusively the domain of the sports car, automobile rallies now involve all kinds of vehicles — passenger cars, station wagons and jeeps included, so the children of the family have a chance to tag along in the back seat while Mom and Dad participate. Since speed is generally not a factor, danger is at a minimum.

But what is rallying? What is a rally? It is an outdoor "parlor game" in which car owners get additional pleasure from their cars through organized competition that stresses safety, accuracy in driving and following directions. Generally, it is broken down into two types, according to a new rally manual published by Castrol GTX motor oil, sponsor of United States Auto Club driving champion Joe Leonard. These types are TSD (Time, Speed, Distance) rallies and fun (or gimmick) rallies. The gimmick rally has the broadest appeal and is almost limitless in its variations. It's a natural for family fun.

"In the fun or gimmick rally, the rally master attempts to create more entertainment than accurate driving by furnishing instructions that might be challenging to follow," points out the motor oil firm's rally expert, Eric Oakley.

"The instructions are always honest but sometimes confusing. Scoring of each rally varies, but negative points are issued for failure to follow instructions exactly, or for being unable to provide answers to questions about the course."

The rallymaster's responsibility is setting up the course — the route the rally covers. He draws up and furnishes all entrants with the general instructions for the rally. Especially in fun rallies, the rallymaster uses his imagination to add to the difficulty and joy of the sport.

A rally might be a map rally. If so, each team will be furnished with matching road maps, but with different instructions and challenging clues regarding the changes of direction.

The theme might also be a series of photos, sometimes taken from cars so that they look the same as the landmarks the driver and navigator can spot while driving along. To make it more interesting, some rallymasters have been known to take the photos from the air.

These are only two of the scores of ways a course may be laid out. No matter what the theme is, much thought is given to the course for the rally, from starting point to finish line.

The rallymaster makes certain the rallyists do not create traffic jams and thus arouse the ire of other motorists, according to the Castrol Rally Manual. The same is true of the speeds designated. No rally master worth his salt would attempt to lay out a course that would make the contestants break speed laws.

The team of driver and navigator is often husband and wife (with the kids to root them on); or boyfriend and girlfriend, or just two friends of either sex.

Rallyists seek to attempt not to attract the attention of the average motorist. Most likely you've passed many rallyists on the highway without even knowing it!

Camping takes high cost out of vacation lodgings

If you drive the turnpikes and free-ways these days it sometimes appears as if the whole world is on wheels out there on the interstates that crisscross the country.

It also appears that about one out of ten of your fellow travelers are carrying their accommodations with them — from luxury traveling motor hotels to the old time tent.

It used to be that campers camped for the sport of it. Like sailors who find the sport is in the sailing, campers camped as a sport. It was an end in itself.

What's going on now? Travellers are camping as a means of going somewhere. They stay a night or two; perhaps a weekend, then they are off to see the Badlands, climb the Washington Monument or visit a grandchild half a continent away.

Allen Burrowbridge owns a campground with accommodations for travelers or campers, near the Delaware Water Gap outside of East Stroudsburg, Pa.

"It used to be that campers were a particular breed," Mr. Burrowbridge said one evening recently as he walked around his acres well filled with tents, campers, travel trailers and motorhomes. "Now, however, it seems that most of the families who come in here are carrying their houses with them as a means of beating the high costs of motels and hotels, crowds and restricted quarters for children."

Such families have a wide choice of accommodations from which to choose. New campgrounds are generally owner-operated, well spaced across the country, provide spotless washrooms, laundry, recreation room and pool. Overnight price is $3 per night for two, with extra charge for electricity.

The rigs that roll along the highways are as varied as the families who occupy them. They will range in price from a $30,000 motorhome with tub, shower, toilet, television and stereo tape deck down to an inexpensive tent outfit with cooking done over a campfire and sleeping bags on the floor of the tent at night.

Many units are completely self-contained, that is, all waste is stored in "holding tanks" for disposal at "dumping stations" that now are found with increasing frequency at service stations and all campgrounds. Many trailers and motorhomes have their own hot water, tub or shower or both, and are completely air-conditioned.

One obvious reason for the great growth of combining travel with camping or vice versa is the fact that children have an opportunity to run off excess energy after a day cooped up in the car. This is very often not possible with the family who takes a motel or hotel room and the kids are limited to sitting on the floor watching television. Once the chores are done, the kids take off for the swimming pool, playground or hiking trails.

Some idea about the number of accommodations available can be determined from a quick look at any of the various campground guides available. The Rand and McNally travel trailer guide, for instance, lists 351 in New York State; 231 in Ohio and 254 in Pennsylvania. They are rated for excellence with as much care as a Michelin guide to the restaurants of France.

So, next time you wonder whether you can afford that trip to the Grand Canyon or back to the old home place, take a look at a camping guide instead of the hotel and motel register.

BIKE TOURING IS fast becoming a popular sport for young adults with families. Handy aids for these cyclists are bike touring packs, ideal for taking along picnic lunches, extra clothing or rain gear, spare bike parts or even a small first aid kit.

Pedal your way across miles of scenic country

If you're a bicycling or backpacking buff, you can now combine the fun of pedals and packs and join the growing ranks of "Bike Touring" enthusiasts.

The miles of bikeways crisscrossing the nation plus the growing desire to go self-contained under our own leg-power, has sparked a blossoming of touring packs and bags that are specially designed for cyclists.

"Bike touring is akin to backpacking on two wheels, and young adults are finding it a zestful, relaxing form of exercise . . . and fun," according to Adolf Kelfer, Advisor on Physical Fitness for Sears Sports Advisory Staff. "Rather than merely pedaling around the block a few times, they are taking day-long or weekend excursions along the countryside."

For safety reasons, Kelfer stated, the packs are attached to the bike frame rather than on the cyclist's back. Depending upon the type, the packs fit on the handlebars, behind the seat, or saddle-bag style on the rear carrier.

"A touring pack should be water-resistant, with zipper-closure and constructed with lightweight, durable material. And bright colors mean added safety," he said.

Bike touring packs are ideal for taking along picnic lunches, extra clothing, raingear, spare parts, or even a small first-aid kit for the occasional skinned knee.

Bike touring can be a family affair, too. Thanks to the new baby carriers on the market, you need not leave the tots at home. The bucket seats are designed for comfort and safety during an afternoon or day's jaunt. Equipped with built-in seat belts and leg guards, any child can join the fun.

With today's bicycle trails and the proper accessories, bike touring can mean easy riding for young and old alike.

TV 'spots' to fight violent image

by DAVID E. ANDERSON
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Television, which increasingly has the finger pointed at it as an influence in creating violent behavior among children, will have a chance to present some mini-alternatives early next year.

Broadcast agencies from four denominations are cooperating in producing three television spot announcements aimed at helping children see and use methods other than violence in resolving conflicts.

"The models a child finds in a majority of his TV experiences depict physically violent behavior as a workable and socially acceptable method of dealing with conflict," according to Ben T. Logan, coordinator of the project.

"We believe TV can also present positive models of dealing with conflict," he added.

Cooperating in the creation, production, research and distribution of the 30-second "counter-commercial" are the broadcast agencies of the Episcopal Church, the United Methodist Church, the Christian Church Disciples of Christ and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.

Logan said the spot announcements will show everyday conflict situations which a child could encounter and offer an alternative to violence with a model, drawn from the Christian faith, as a way to settle the problem.

"THE HOPE is that as children view the messages they will imitate the model and thus put Christian principles to practical use in dealing with conflict," Logan said.

As a first step, but a step that will be followed throughout the production process, the agencies will do extensive research to pre-test the spots with children. The Lilly Endowment, Inc., has already made a $9,500 grant for the research. Logan said that as many as 300-400 children, from all four of the denominations, will be involved in the research project.

One spot, which the children will be asked to respond to, shows two children running for a swing at the same time. They begin tugging at it, and, according to Logan, "the anger and the potential for violence begin to build. The scene then freezes and a narrator asks, 'what would you do.' " Then a suggested solution is shown — the two children sharing the swing with each child pushing the other in turn and the narrator comments: "There are lots of things you can do when two people want the same thing."

ACCORDING TO LOGAN, the responses of children to the spot announcements will be videotaped and modifications in the spots will be made after evaluating the children's response.

While based on Christian principles, Logan said the spots will not contain "overt Christian content." Such content, he added, makes children's spots very difficult to market.

The four church broadcast agencies have funded the program with $40,000.

DuBrow On TV

by Rick DuBrow

HOLLYWOOD — The old Hollywood and the glamor that made the town famous are represented on television chiefly by movie reruns. But there is little old-style Hollywood glamor in the weekly entertainment series on the home tube.

Video's primary goal in its regular weekly shows is to find a performer or vehicle that will wear well, rather than to seek a program that might be brilliant at times but erratic. This conservative outlook is based on the constant network search for shows that will guarantee a consistent and sizeable share of the audience — for sponsors.

There is, of course, a gold deal of glamor on video in the many special programs, and in some of the guest stars on regular series. And it is true that old-style, big-name Hollywood luminaries are no guarantee of ratings success in their own weekly television shows. A number of these movie stars have failed in their series attempts, although usually because of a wrong or inadequate program concept.

IN THE END, however, regardless of the various reasons and qualifications, the fact is that very few weekly video stars radiate the kind of glowing charm and rare individuality that added up to a sense of glamor and romance in so many old movie headlines.

The few television stars who have these qualities are easy to pick out. They would include, for instance, Dean Martin and Lucille Ball. And Peter Falk, whose home screen "Columbo" character — an amiable, feisty, dumb-like-a-fox detective — would fit into any era of moviemaking and delight audiences. And Rock Hudson, who turned to video as a police commissioner in the "McMillan & Wife" series.

And there is Raymond Burr — one of the best movie villains for years, but now a television hero after starring in the "Perry Mason" and "Ironside" series. And, although Doris Day's weekly CBS-TV situation comedy wasn't so good, you have to give the lady credit for holding the video audience for a reasonable run with some of the same qualities that made her a major movie star for years.

VIDEO'S GENERALLY strict formats and procedures can undoubtedly prevent certain potential major headlines from achieving full-blown stardom — and glamor — until they leave for other fields.

For example, Steve McQueen, Charles Bronson, Lee Marvin and Clint Eastwood once had weekly television series. Richard Chamberlain, one of the few young stars to achieve real glamor in a video series ("Dr. Kildare"), was another upcoming performer who blossomed later in the movies — and, in his case, on the stage too.

Rather than remaining in a rut by trying other video series, or taking easy, predictable roles that might have led to oblivion, he has tackled some of the major classical parts — and other adult acting assignments — and, in general, won praise, opening an entire new career for himself.

OF THE young stars who have their own television series today, one who would seem to have potential as, say, a major movie headliner is David Carradine of the weekly ABC-TV "Kung Fu" show. Already a proven stage actor, he is obviously a performer with determination, high standards for himself and a perspective on his profession. Whether the chips fall his way is another thing, and we will have to wait and see.

There are, of course, some video stars with definite links to the older traditions of the movies — for instance, Karl Malden, Buddy Ebsen, Brian Keith, Robert Young, Tony Randall, Dick Van Dyke, Efrem Zimballist Jr. and William Conrad. And Mary Tyler Moore might have been fine in those breezy career-girl movie parts that Rosalind Russell did so well. But over-all, television's weekly entertainment series display little of Hollywood's old-style sense of glamor.

Suburban paramedic programs to be coordinated

by JILL BETNER

A master plan to coordinate the operation of paramedic emergency care programs in the Northwest suburbs is being developed by the North Suburban Health Resources Association (NSHRA).

The function of the plan will be to ensure that personnel and facilities involved in the programs in area communities are used as effectively as possible. The NSHRA includes representatives of the 12 major hospitals in the area.

MALCOLM MACCOUN, president of Northwest Community Hospital in Arlington Heights, said yesterday the plan is being drawn up because the paramedic program is spreading rapidly and is in need of some type of overall organization.

Presently, there is one system of paramedic rescue squads operating in Buffalo Grove, Rolling Meadows, Arlington Heights, Palatine, Schaumburg, Hoffman Estates, Morton Grove, Inverness and Lake Zurich. Programs are also being set up in Elk Grove and Wheeling.

Northwest Community Hospital is the base of operations of area paramedics. Several communities along the North Shore are scheduled to initiate paramedic programs sometime in September with St. Francis Hospital in Evanston as the base for that system.

"We want to work together to make sure these programs are coordinated and there is a minimum of overlap," MacCoun said.

THE MASTER plan will outline the working relationship each paramedic unit will have with area hospitals. For example, Northwest Community serves as the link between paramedics on the scene and physicians. A doctor is on duty full-time in the emergency room of the hospital to talk to the paramedics by radio, giving them advice and monitoring their treatment.

Other area hospitals serve only as receiving facilities, taking patients treated by paramedics who require further care.

"We've already worked all this out for our own service area," MacCoun said. "It's a matter now of seeing how the system can be duplicated in other areas to best serve the northwest communities."

One of the possible problems the master plan will be designed to avoid, MacCoun said, is the interference in radio signals. This could result if hospitals in the area set up their communications systems in such a way that they interfere with each other's broadcasts.

JANET SCHWETTMAN, an Inverness housewife who was instrumental in bringing paramedic programs to the Northwest suburbs, said yesterday hospitals in New York are having this kind of communications interference.

"We haven't had any overlaps here because so far we just have one system running," Mrs. Schwettman said, "but with the North Shore area coming in, if we aren't careful we might get into a real mess."

On a broader scale, Mrs. Schwettman said a national agency to give uniform certification to all paramedics is in the works in Washington, D.C. The not-for-profit organization, she said, would set national standards for paramedic training.

BUFFALO GROVE Fire Chief Wayne Winter said he feels the plan to standardize training is a good idea.

"It's good because there are really big differences now in the requirements," Winter said. "In Buffalo Grove, (as in other suburbs) 100 hours of class is required, in Florida, it's 400. A paramedic should mean the same thing anywhere in the country."

Currently, there are national standards for the emergency medical technician certification that each potential paramedic must obtain before he is allowed to take paramedic training. Illinois is one of the few states that is working out statewide standards for paramedic training, but the requirements have not yet been defined.

After nearly eight months of operation, MacCoun and Mrs. Schwettman agreed that all the area paramedic units appear to be functioning smoothly.

BESIDES THE benefits of the program to the victims of emergencies handled by the paramedics, Mrs. Schwettman said she has been made aware of the impact on the trained firemen, policemen and ambulance staffs themselves.

"I get calls almost daily from paramedics telling me how pleased they are to be able to do so much more than just transport patients," she said. "I really think it's significantly raised their level of dignity and pride in their professions."

Win At Bridge

by Oswald and James Jacoby

If you learned bridge at your mother's knee, the chances are that she taught you to play second hand low.

As doughty family men, we believe in according mothers the greatest amount of respect possible, but we have to disagree vehemently with anyone who makes this rule an invariable one.

There are many occasions when second hand should play high. In particular when it won't do any good to play low.

South must play dummy's queen of hearts at trick one. The card can't do him any good if left in dummy, but if played right then and there it may be worth a full trick.

It isn't, since East produces the king. South holds up his ace of hearts until the third lead of the suit.

Then he leads a club toward dummy. If West plays low South finesesses dummy's 10-spot. East can't do anything better than to take his jack and lead a club, but South goes up with the ace and cashes enough tricks for his contract.

Suppose West forgets all about second hand low and goes up with the king. South can try all sorts of plays but even the best one will leave him one trick short.

Jack Stockton introduces foreground music!

Most FM radio stations play background music. The kind that's played in elevators, offices and factories. The kind you can, and often do, turn off without even touching the dial. On WM, Jack Stockton plays foreground music. The kind of music that makes you want to hum or sing-along. Your kind of music. And he talks to you as if you are a human instead of a robot even if you're in an elevator, office or a factory. After all, isn't that why you turned on the radio in the first place?

'Lift the lid' on fee for toilets, league urges

The Metropolitan Sanitary District should "lift the lid" on a user's tax for residential toilet service, the Cook County League of Women Voters (LWV) urged yesterday.

"The only polluters in this world are not industries. We should pay for sewer service as we pay for natural gas, electricity and water," Kathy Schuck, urged the sanitary district yesterday.

Mrs. Schuck, environmental control chairman for the Cook County LWV, said if residents paid a user's fee to empty bathtubs, toilets and washing machines into sewers maybe the federal government would be more willing to provide funding for major projects such as the combined sewer tunnel and reservoir plan.

She said the user fee should be based on the amount of water that goes into a home, industry or commercial establishment.

She admitted, however, the sanitary district would be facing a "pandora's box" in trying to install meters to implement the user fee for sewer service.

Two MSD trustees, Nicholas Melas and Chester Majewski, said they opposed the user tax and instead believed that real property taxes were a fair method of charging for sewer use. They noted the sanitary district already levies an industrial surcharge against industries which empty large quantities of water into the sanitary sewers.

Heart disease still No. 1 killer in U.S.; deaths up

Deaths from heart diseases have risen in the past year despite an increase in life expectancy, the National Center for Health Statistics has reported.

The center also concluded that heart disease remains the number one cause of death in the country.

According to statistics, the incidence of fatal heart disease was up eight-tenths of one per cent in 1972 compared to incidences in 1971. In other words, 358 of every 100,000 persons die from heart disease.

The Heart Association of North Cook County lists several symptoms or danger signs common to heart problems:

- Prolonged, heavy pressure or squeezing pain in the center of the chest, behind the breastbone.

- Pain may spread to the shoulder, arm, neck or jaw.

- Pain or discomfort is often accompanied by sweating, nausea, vomiting and shortness of breath may also occur.

The heart association suggests quick action when any of the above symptoms occur.

Book reveals truck growth

The importance of truck transportation to the U.S. economy is highlighted in Motor Truck Facts, an annual publication of the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Assn.

The new 72-page book introduces interpretive text on progress and problems involving motor truck manufacture and use.

All previous production and sales records for trucks and buses were broken last year. Each month, January through December, a new monthly high was set for truck and bus sales. Year-end totals reached 2,482,574 units.

The MVMA publication notes that much of the increase was spurred by the growing popularity of light trucks for personal transportation and recreation. Nearly 10 million U. S. households now own light trucks; they serve as the sole means of motor vehicle transportation for a million families.

Commentary in the book covers such subjects as truck safety and durability, noise reduction, emissions control, scrapage, fleet use, exports, ownership and employment.

A section on economic impact points out that 7.6 per cent of the U. S. Gross National Product is derived from highway freight movement and that trucking operations employ nine million persons earning $72 billion annually.

The booklet also points out that truck taxes represent 40 cents of every dollar in the Highway Trust Fund and account for one of every three motor vehicle tax dollars paid to federal and state governments.

Korchnoi gave up a piece without hurting

When Victor Korchnoi sacrificed a piece in his winning game against Robert Byrne at Leningrad (as shown in last week's column), he had to foresee a number of possible side variations as well as the six concluding moves that occurred in the actual game.

For Korchnoi, one of the world's best tactical players, such a feat is not too demanding, especially in the game under consideration, in which there were a limited number of plausible possibilities.

(Diagram 1)

In the first diagram we see a position that could have occurred if Byrne had played Q-N2 on his 23rd move. This difference would have eliminated 23...Q-K2 and 24...B-B3 as played in the actual game. Korchnoi could regain his piece in the diagrammed position with B-KN6 as QxN allows a knight fork and Q-K2 allows BxN, as in the game.

(Diagram 2)

In Diagram 2, we see the position that would have happened if Byrne had responded to 23...B-B3 with...Q-Q1 instead of Q-N2 as he did in the actual game. White wins with 25...B-B4 check. Wherever black goes with the king, his queen will fall to a knight fork or RxQ.

(Diagram 3)

Our third position shows the final position of the actual game. Here Byrne resigned. If he had continued with...QxB, Korchnoi would not only have been two pawns ahead after 29...NxB, NxN: 30...RxN, but the threats of Q-Q4 check (or Q-B3 check) followed by mate or Q-B7 would have been too much for the defense.

(Diagram 4)

Our last position shows a game played last year in which black's queen, bishop and knight combine in a way similar to the variations above. After 1)...Q-N5 check; 2) K-Q1, B-Q8, white must lose the queen. (If 3) QxB, NxB check.) Korchnoi brought years of experience in such positions to his game with Byrne. Increased familiarity with thematic positions of all kinds will make it easier for you to calculate variations in your own game.

How the chessmen move

THE PAWN moves only forward one space, with the exception of its first move when it has the option of moving two spaces forward. It captures one square diagonally forward.

THE KNIGHT moves and captures in the form of a capital L — two spaces in either a horizontal or vertical direction and one space to the right or left. It is the only piece permitted to jump over other men.

THE QUEEN, the most powerful piece on the board, moves and captures diagonally, and horizontally and vertically, along the ranks and files.

THE ROOK (occasionally called the castle) moves and captures horizontally and vertically, along the ranks and files.

THE BISHOP moves and captures diagonally.

THE KING moves and captures one square at a time in any direction.

The Doctor Says...by Dr. Lawrence Lamb

Childless couple seeks test tube baby

Dear Dr. Lamb — This is a very hard question to ask. I have asked different people and they all say to ask you. I had to have an operation so I can't have children. My husband and I are very much in love and would give anything to have one. We have heard that you could go to a hospital up north and have a test tube baby. Is this true? If so, please let us know how to get the information.

Dear Reader — No, you won't be able

Do meat eaters run a greater risk of cancer?

COLUMBIA, Mo. — A theory that big meat eaters run a greater risk of developing cancer of the colon than those whose diet is more vegetarian has never been proven by medical science.

Now a University of Missouri Medical Center Research team is conducting a one-year project to prove or disprove the theory.

The research team, headed by Dr. David Hentges, professor of microbiology at the university's medical school, will focus its attention on 10 graduate and medical student volunteers, who will follow a carefully formulated diet for four months.

EACH VOLUNTEER will be given a specific diet for a four-week period — first a normal diet, then a meat-free diet, followed by a high meat diet, and then back to normal diet.

Hentges said each of the diets contain all the nutritional values needed daily such as fibers, proteins, carbohydrates, fats, minerals and vitamins, but differs only in the amount of meat prescribed.

Every four weeks, fecal — or waste — specimens will be collected from the volunteers and analyzed in laboratories at the Medical Center.

What the researchers will be trying to determine is whether the protein or, more likely, the fats in meat enhance the growth of certain bacteria in the intestines which in turn produce carcinogens — or cancer-producing chemicals.

"A person's diet is capable of changing the composition of flora in the intestinal tract," Hentges said. "We have a lot of evidence that the diet you eat produces the changes, but it is all circumstantial evidence at this time."

HENTGES SAID studies so far have indicated a higher incidence of colon cancer is found in industrialized countries where a lot of meat is eaten, but a lesser incidence in underdeveloped countries, where the people are vegetarians.

"In the United States, Canada and Western Europe, there are definitely more cases of colon cancer than there are in countries in Asia, Africa and rural areas of Japan," Hentges said. "This could be due to the animal protein and fat — or in other words — meat."

Hentges said the next step then would be to find some way of lowering the concentration of bacteria when larger and larger amounts of meat are eaten. In the meantime, people fearing colon cancer would have to avoid eating too much meat.

to go anywhere and have a test tube baby. It is true that an early fertilized egg and early development has been produced within a test tube as a laboratory procedure. No one has, however, carried the test tube baby to normal maturity. Many scientists feel that the experiments shouldn't even be done. I suspect it will be though since most things which can be done eventually are done.

Your basic problem is that you would like to have a baby, which is quite understandable. You didn't elaborate on what kind of an operation you've had, but if you're talking about having had an operation on your tubes, sometimes this can be reversed so that a woman can become pregnant. To find out anything about this you would need to see a good gynecologist, a specialist in women's problems. Of course, if you have had an operation because you couldn't have children for health reasons, then this wouldn't be helpful for you. The next best thing would be adoption.

Dear Dr. Lamb — Recently you discussed in your column about the value of high protein food.

About one year ago I discovered the value and importance of protein and now I am much better physically. I am an elderly man and now I find I can do more and harder work since I have switched to soybean cereals and wheat germ foods. I do not care for sweets of any kind now because I really never get hungry like I did before.

There is one thing that irks me, other people tell me the dangers of eating high protein food.

So, the question is, just how harmful is high protein food when used in generous portions?

Dear Reader — You are probably doing a lot better than many other older people who shift their diet to eating large amounts of sweets and disregard the proper intake of proteins. There are all kinds of proteins and I prefer to see people get their protein from a variety of sources. This should include lean meat, cereals, fish, poultry and fortified nonfat milk.

There is no danger in eating too many proteins as long as you are not eating too many calories and getting overweight. The only people who have a problem of this type are those who have serious liver or kidney disease. If you like your soybean cereals and wheat germ foods there isn't any reason why you shouldn't eat them and they probably are very good for you. I do hope however, that you are getting some lean meat and some fortified skim milk in your diet. You need calcium. You'll get some in soybeans but it's hard for most people to get sufficient calcium unless they are including an adequate amount of milk products such as fortified nonfat milk or uncreamed cottage cheese in sufficient quantities in their diet.

Excess amounts of proteins are converted by the liver to carbohydrates. In the process the nitrogen that makes the chemical compound a protein is simply stripped off and eliminated in the urine.

Ninth District Tournament hoping for better weather

It was more of the same Wednesday as the American Legion Ninth District tried to get its annual double-elimination play-off tournament off the ground.

After two days of the tourney, only one game had been definitely resolved — and the weatherman is to blame. First, wet fields wiped out two of three openers scheduled Tuesday (Arlington Heights whipped Norwood Park 8-0 in the only one played).

Then Wednesday, seven innings were played in each of Tuesday's two rained-out games before more rain halted proceedings. Seven innings would be complete games in the regular season, but tournament rules strictly state that all contests must go nine regardless.

Therefore, the two (remember, still first-round games) were to be finished Thursday. Logan Square led Wheeling 4-3 and Mount Prospect had a 3-0 grip on Park Ridge with two innings to go. (For final results, dial the Herald's sports bulletin number, 394-1700).

Barring rain, the tourney was originally slated to end by Monday and possibly even Sunday if one team went through unbeaten. Now, the league might have to scramble to get things completed by Wednesday evening — and that's the absolute deadline. The Cook County play-offs begin at Calumet City Thursday and the Ninth District must send a representative — the tourney winner.

Larry Monroe of Mount Prospect was the top individual star emerging from Wednesday's battles, having a no-hitter going with six outs to go. Jay Liggett of Park Ridge was also pitching an excellent game, having allowed just three hits — two in the infield and a blooper.

Besides not allowing a hit, Monroe set down the last 19 batters he faced after issuing two walks in the first inning; allowed only one ball to be hit out of the infield; threw only 72 pitches in seven innings; and threw only 21 balls, the rest being either strikes or outs.

This game was marred by three Park Ridge players being thrown out of the game.

The Wheeling-Logan Square was an interesting one, too, with the outcome very much in doubt as the game was halted after some light drizzling. Two of the area's best pitchers, Mike Cook of the Lions and George Pattee of Wheeling, were dueling but both teams were showing batting punch with a total of 14 hits. Eight were by Wheeling but it still trailed by a run.

Cook had already racked up 11 strikeouts in the first seven innings and Pattee seven. Each had walked two.

Wheeling took a 2-0 lead in the second on three sudden Lion errors, Pat McGinn's single and George Henricks' sacrifice fly.

The score was tied in the fourth when Stan Bobowski lashed a two-run homer barely fair down the right-field line that skipped past the end of the fence. Stan had to run hard and slide to barely make it in a close play at the plate.

Jim Bucaro's two-out single in the next inning put Logan Square ahead and another run scored when the ball was bobbled in the outfield. Wheeling cut it to 4-3 in the sixth on Henricks' triple.

Cook had a perfect game going — at the plate. He was three for three Wednesday, all sharp singles to right, while Henricks was two for two plus his sacrifice.

The remaining tournament schedule was subject to change if there was more rain, but today's games, both at 5 p.m., are slated to be the losers of last night's completions at St. Viator and the winners against one another at Recreation Park. There will be two games Saturday and two Sunday.

NINTH DISTRICT REVISED TOURNAMENT SCHEDULE

Legion happenings make writer sick

Guest Columnist

In four years of watching American Legion Ninth District games, I've seen a lot of good baseball. However, recently there have been a lot of bush league temper tantrums, and frankly, I think I'm safe in saying I'm not the only one who's sick of it.

I thought I had seen just about all the Ninth District had to offer in the way of complaining, but Wednesday night proved differently.

I had the misfortune to see the Mount Prospect-Park Ridge tournament game at Forest View, and I never have been so outraged at the conduct of a group of ballplayers. This went beyond the usual bench jockeying and jawing with the umpire that helps add a little color to baseball. This was violent screaming, not only between teams, but within one team.

Three players were thrown out of the game. Park Ridge coach Jerry Rome, although burned at the umpires for calls he thought they blew earlier in the evening, tried to quiet his players down. But nothing short of shacking and mummifying one player would have shut him up.

When Rome attempted to intervene and carry on the argument by himself, this player began ranting at Rome. Finally he was run off into the dugout but he could still be heard hollering several minutes after the game had been called due to rain.

Another Park Ridge player (who was the first to be ejected) actually walked off the infield and toward the Mount Prospect dugout, daring a Prospect player to "try to come out here and make me." The barbs kept up, and both the Park Ridge player and the Mount Prospect bench jockey were tossed out.

That prompted the outburst from the second Park Ridge player, whom Rome could not control.

This wasn't just childish. This wasn't just repulsive. This was outrageous — a blot on Ninth District baseball, and a vivid condemnation of the ballplayers involved.

There have been other incidents, but they are pale by comparison to what happened Wednesday night. It has become commonplace to expect certain Ninth District coaches to argue, complain, and generally make nuisances of themselves. Some coaches say the quality of the umpiring isn't what it should be in the Ninth District. Well, with the abuse they take in this league, I'd never volunteer for the job, that's for sure.

It's aggravating to have sites of games changed without notice, to have rules which decree a game must be played to the end to become official after it's rained out, to see fans hurl insults back and forth behind the backstop — yes, it's aggravating, but it's something that can be swallowed. Unsportsmanlike conduct can't be, and I hope it never will be.

I have to laugh at the hypocrisy I saw at the annual All-Star balloting. There was a coach who refused to nominate one of his best players because "he has a rotten attitude." And who are the coaches to talk about rotten attitudes? Just look at the way some of them conduct themselves, and then tell me who has the rotten attitude.

As I said, a little arguing adds some degree of charm to baseball. By nature it's a slow-moving game, and an occasional battle with an unsuspecting ump makes things interesting. That's to be expected.

But when it sinks to the level of one player arguing with another player, then a player challenging an umpire, and finally, and most deplorable, a player screaming at his own coach in plain view of the fans, something is wrong somewhere. Maybe the coaches don't set a good example, but nobody is about to change, if Ninth District history is any teacher.

So I say ship out, Ninth District trouble makers. It's painfully obvious you'll never shape up.

PROUD WINNERS. Elk Grove's Ron Lansdown, in the white T-shirt, shows Palatine's John Doherty the plaque Elk Grove received for winning the 1972 Paddock Olympics. Doherty and the Palatine Park District will receive an identical model for winning this year in the Seventh Olympiad held at Forest View. Those happy kids, of course, are from Palatine.

STRAIN, STRAIN, STRAIN! With Kim Rouhselang up front and Mike Kennedy just behind, Schaumburg's tug-of-war entry pulls like mad and offers some great facial expressions to boot. Schaumburg placed third behind

Meadows advances; Prospect falters

Rolling Meadows, the youngest member of the Mid-Suburban Conference, joined Hersey as the only two teams still alive in the Illinois High School Summer League baseball tournament.

While Hersey and Dundee were forced to the sidelines by rain, Rolling Meadows ignored a steady drizzle and benched Lane Tech, 5-2.

Prospect wasn't as fortunate at Wheaton Central as the Knights were victimized by a no-hitter, 4-2, and were eliminated. Hersey and Dundee were rescheduled for last night while Rolling Meadows advanced against last year's champion, Niles West, at Recreation Park.

TOUGH IN CLUTCH

Meadows jumped all over Lane for three runs in the third and then tried to speed up the game which seemed on the brink of being suspended by the constant rain.

The Mustangs tallied their trio on singles by Joe Riplinger, Glen Zwanick and Scott Green, a sacrifice fly to center by Bruce Hanson and a delayed double steal by Green and Steve Breitbell who had walked.

Meadows increased its advantage to 5-0 in the fifth when Breitbell coaxed another pass, stole his way to third and scored on Mike Saugling's sacrifice fly to center. Brad Davidson was hit by a pitch and eventually scored on Riplinger's single.

Lane chipped away at Meadows' lead in the fifth when it broke the ice on an error and its first hit of the game and drew within three runs of the leaders on a leadoff homer in the sixth.

Ed Bejrowski turned in a spectacular pitching performance for the Mustangs, tossing a nifty two-hitter, walking only one and whiffing seven.

NO-HITTER OUSTS KNIGHTS

The rains didn't come soon enough for Prospect Wednesday night as Wheaton Central eliminated the Knights from further Summer League Tournament action via a no-hitter, 4-2.

Wheaton's Jeff Trotter, a righthander with complete control of a deceptive curve ball, didn't permit a Prospect hit while walking five and fanning 10.

Wheaton got all the runs it needed to advance into the fourth round in the inning on a walk, double, triple and sacrifice.

fice fly. The winners added another in the fifth on two singles and an error.

Prospect, although failing to get wood on the ball, pushed two unearned runs home in the sixth when both George Savage and Mark Quade walked, moved up on a passed ball and scored when the catcher threw the ball past third and through the left fielder. Kevin Kelley followed with the Knights' best hit ball of the evening — a line drive shot that was flagged down in centerfield.

Rich Streng started for Prospect but was lifted in favor of Savage during Wheaton's rally in the third. The Knights bowed out with a 14-9 record but are still seeking ball games to close out the season.

Local wrestlers at nationals

Kent Lewis and Ken Smith of Wheeling are in Iowa City today and tomorrow for the High School Freestyle Nationals. Both finished second in the Illinois State High School Freestyle Tournament last Saturday at Hersey High School which pitted two wrestlers at each weight from seven districts.

Lewis, wrestling at 192 pounds, defeated Mike Padilla of Tilden Tech, Jim Larson of Lincoln, Terry Larson of DeKalb and tied Don Ideran of Aurora (all were in the state last spring) to take a second to Ideran who had less black points. Smith, meanwhile, accomplished his runnerup spot at 154 pounds by tying Gary Siebert of Fenton. Highly regarded Jim Sylverne of Maine East was eliminated along with several other outstanding wrestlers in surprising developments.

Lewis and Smith may be among a host of Illinoisans who will conduct a cultural wrestling exchange group from the west coast with tournaments in Rock Island, Rich East, East Leyden and Pekin later this summer.

Milton Richman

by MILTON RICHMAN

CHEYENNE, Wyo. UPI — Joe Alexander finished his work for the day, and some people, only those who didn't know, would say he had a cinch.

The whole thing took him less than 10 seconds.

He had done well, considering he hadn't had much sleep. He was sitting under the white wooden stands Wednesday talking about his work while shouts of encouragement, and some groans, filtered down from the stands above.

They were watching other competitors in the 77th annual Cheyenne Frontier Days or as they call it, "The Daddy of 'em all," when it comes to pure old fashioned rodeo.

Joe Alexander, who had competed in Ogden, Utah, the night before and who had then gotten into his car and driven nearly 300 miles so he could get up on one of those man-maiming broncs again here, was talking about how some folks think he's a little soft upstairs to be doing what he's doing for a living.

"I guess the question they keep asking me most is, 'How do you stand all this stress and strain?'" he said. "You know how some people are, they think, Christ, you're gonna get killed."

"But it isn't really that bad. You have to know what you're doing when you get up there on that bronc. If you know what you're doing, and you have a little luck, you can do all right for yourself."

Joe Alexander, 29, did all right for himself last year. He set a record for the most money ever won in bareback riding with earnings of $32,126. That was all right. But it cost him at least $15,000 in expenses to win that money. That wasn't so all right.

"I can't speak for everybody on why they rodeo, but with me, it's 100 per cent for money," said Alexander. He makes himself out much more commercial than he actually is. You can tell that when you ask him about the gold belt buckle he wears, the one which says, "Joe Alexander, would champion bareback bronc rider."

"Yes," he says, glancing down at the buckle. "It means a lot to me. I think it wholesales for $500 or something like that, but the competition I got it for is open to the whole world."

What Joe Alexander leaves unsaid is that he's the best in the world at what he does, and once you see him in action you understand why.

Alexander has his own style, which is usually the mark of a champ.

Most bareback bronc riders lean backwards when they're trying to stay up for the necessary eight seconds, but Alexander sits right up on the rigging.

He looks in complete command. He's human, though. He can be frightened by a horse the same way you can, and he remembers a time he was during a rodeo in Ellensburg, Wash.

"I hung up on a horse and couldn't get my hand outta the rig," he said. "I was scared. The only thing I could think of was getting loose. But I couldn't. They took me to the hospital. I had a concussion and was kinda goofy there for awhile, but I don't call that anything serious. There were no broken bones."

Joe Alexander is one of the few rodeo competitors with a college diploma. He got his from the University of Wyoming.

The toughest part about rodeo work as far as he's concerned is the traveling and the physical strain that comes from trying to stay on bareback broncs.

Joe Alexander is only 5-foot-8 inches and weighs in at 135, but anybody who would argue he isn't really a professional athlete would be dead wrong.

He is paid to engage in physical competition before crowds in an arena, and there are boxers and ballplayers who aren't in anywhere near as good shape as he is. His waistline is 28 inches.

"I have to watch my diet," says Alexander. "If a cowboy gets fat, he's all finished."

All-Stars secure third, could win state title

The Woodfield Babe Ruth All-Stars have secured at least third place in the Champaign based state tournament for boys 13-to-15 years old.

Woodfield was scheduled to face the Hinsdale-Moline loser in Thursday's 7:30 p.m. game. The local club defeated Harvey, 6-3, and Mattoon, 7-1, in play this week.

Mark Huldhyld pitched and hit Woodfield to victory over Mattoon. His home run over the left center field fence 350 feet away was the first ball ever hit out of Centennial Field.

Russ Zonca, Steve Stompanato, Glen Stromberg, Joe Parille, Mike Ledna and Dean Manhoff made the All-Stars' other hits.

Stromberg, Larry Lewey, Jeff Weaver and Randy Romano participated in three double plays for Woodfield.

Mike Christy pitched a complete game and gave just five hits in the win over Harvey. That secured Woodfield at least a third place finish. The All-Stars have advanced through the losers bracket since dropping their opener to Moline in the double elimination tournament.

Harvey scored three unearned runs against Christy in the sixth, helped along by three Woodfield errors.

Woodfield scored two runs each in the first and fourth innings. Single runs scored in the third and fifth.

Woodfield's hits against Harvey were made by Terry Carson, Romano, Zonca, Weaver, Stromberg, Stompanato and Manhoff. Zonca and Carson hit doubles.

The All-Stars swiped four bases including Zonca's steal of home at Centennial Field.

Rebels to host Skokie Saturday

The Northwest Rebels, current leaders of the North Division of the Greater Midwest Semi-Pro league, host Skokie in a crucial game at 1 p.m. Saturday at Harper College.

Skokie leads the South Division and has lost only once all season. The Rebels stand 13-4, 12-4 in the league. With the playoffs due to start Aug. 11, the Rebels currently are deeply involved in the race for the four playoff spots.

The Rebels will play the Chicago Hornets approximately one half hour after the conclusion of the Skokie game. Then Sunday, the Rebels will play two games at Park Ridge.

3 golf tourneys scheduled

Several area golfers will tee off in three upcoming events sponsored by the Chicago District Golf Association.

The 10th annual pro-senior best ball championship will be held at Evanston Golf Club in Skokie today, the qualifying round for the 33th annual junior open championship will be staged over the Hilldale Country Club in Hoffman Estates Tuesday, and the inaugural honor caddy day will be conducted at Idlewild Country Club in Flossmoor Monday.

The pro-senior best ball event will include one professional and three others 55 years of age or older. Representing the Herald area will be three country clubs — Rob Roy, Inverness and Rolling Green.

Pro Bob McDonald will team with Clarence Norberg, James Romano and Rudy Laskowski from Rob Roy. Inverness will enter professional George Capoun with seniors Dominick DiMatteo Jr., Ray LaLonde and Bill Mehner. Bill Ventresca will be the pro out of Rolling Green. Seniors have not yet been decided.

Twenty-six entrants will compete in the qualifying round for the junior open championship. Arlington Heights residents include Calvin Zimmerman, John Andrup, Mark Hartman, Donald Tesmer, Ron Swanson, Michael Ross, Brad Stake, Chris Marszalek, Terrence McBride and John McBride.

From Mount Prospect will be Craig Caucins, Steve Spielman, David Nelson, Scott Nordill, Steve Anderson, Rich Carlson and Craig Ridley.

Other entrants include Dave Love, Cliff

Garcla, Stacy Norman, Joe Kuzyk, Bob Capoun, Mario Vitale, Richard Gleason, and Rick Sargent.

Three area caddies will compete in the honor day. Paul VonDriska of Green Acres, Gerry Caffrey of Inverness and Tom McEnerney of Rolling Green will play golf and have lunch. All caddies will receive a memento of the tournament.

Two tennis clinics scheduled Saturday

Two free tennis clinics for adults will be held from 9-11 a.m. for beginners and 11 a.m.-1 p.m. for intermediates Saturday at the Northbrook Racquet Club. Players must bring their own shoes, but the club will provide tennis balls. Park district-sponsored tournaments for adults are slated for Aug. 4 and every weekend for the rest of the month.

We defy you to order a car dealer's "rustproofing" now that you know all about Ziebart rustproofing:

1. If you think your car dealer's "rustproofing" is factory approved, forget it. No car manufacturer has the facilities to train rustproofing specialists. Or technical manuals for each and every car. Or specialized tools. (Where most "rustproofers" have two or three tools, we have nine. All patented.) Whatever a car dealer offers you is his own responsibility.

2. The Ziebart Process. Guaranteed to run and drip. And work.

Anybody who says he has "drip-proof" rustproofing doesn't have real rustproofing. Our sealant runs so it can penetrate seams—even welded seams. It runs, covers, spreads—protects. That's why rustproofing takes a full day at Ziebart: Only after the running and dripping is complete do we give you your new car back.

3. Would you believe we know more about the inside of your new car than any car dealer?

Being specialists, we are experts in our line of work. We use new car drawings as well as blueprints to determine exactly where the boxed-in, hidden areas are on every car. And just as important, we know where not to drill holes that might weaken or even damage your new car.

4. We give you a guarantee you can depend on.

It's a real guarantee. A full, money-back guarantee. A 5-year/50,000-mile new car guarantee against rust-through that's good at any Ziebart location worldwide. If you need service, your guarantee will be honored.

5. 1,000 car and truck fleet managers could have picked any "rustproofing." Instead, they picked Ziebart.

Ask the guys who make their living buying and selling cars and trucks. We rustproof for the U.S. government. For the City of Detroit. For major companies like Olin Corporation. For N.A.S.A. And unlike some "rustproofers", we don't use one grade of sealant to meet government specs and another grade on your car. We have only one grade—the best.

6. It's all we do for a living. We have to do it better.

Rustproofing is what we do all day, every day. Our people are all trained in Ziebart technical schools. All of them use our exclusive patented spray tools.

7. The only way to get rustproofing "as good as Ziebart" or "the same as Ziebart" is to get Ziebart rustproofing.

Sure, you may be told by your car salesman that you'll get something "as good". Because word gets around about just how good our process is. But now you know that there is no way to get Ziebart rustproofing from a car dealer. No way. The best thing you can do for your new car is to say "No thanks." Then come see us.

And if you don't get it here, you're not getting Ziebart rustproofing:

Sox return for Helmet Day

The Chicago White Sox return home July 31 to open an 11-game home stand which includes seven important contests against Western foes Kansas City and Texas and three against Cleveland of the Eastern Division.

This will be the first time the Chicago fans will be able to see superstar Dick Allen in action since he sustained a leg bone fracture on June 28.

The home stand, which runs through Aug. 4, opens Tuesday with three straight night games against the Royals. The Rangers arrive for a night game Friday (Aug. 3) and follow with a single fracas Saturday afternoon and a doubleheader Sunday afternoon.

The Sox-Ranger twinbill will be Helmet Day in which 25,000 shiny, red souvenir helmets will be presented to children age 11 and under accompanied by a paid adult.

In one of the games, the Rangers are expected to start young David Clyde on the mound. Clyde, who was the number one draft choice in the major leagues, signed with the Rangers shortly after he finished high school in June for a bonus figure reported by newsmen in excess of $10,000.

The Sox will enter the series with a 7-2 record against the Rangers.

The Sox have a 5-2 record against the Indians this season, and one Sox will be particularly glad to see Cleveland return. Shortstop Eddie Leon, traded to the Sox by Cleveland this past winter, has hit his old teammates for a .448 clip this season collecting 13 safeties in 29 at bats.

The Sox-Indian Series (Aug. 6-8) will be three straight night games commencing with a makeup contest Monday night which was originally rained out in May 27.

Baseball's 'Howard Hughes' blends nostalgia with change

(Second of Two Parts)
by IRA BERKOW

Phil Wrigley can quickly and happily recall the turn-of-the-century days when his family would ride to a theater in Chicago in the family brougham, driven by a team of four horses; and he can still feel the thrill of passing on the new macadam roads the snazzy town cars which his father, William Jr., looked down his nose at and called "cauffeur-be-damned cars" because the chauffeur sat in the open.

Phil Wrigley can also recall his life as a baseball club owner — he became majority stockholder of the Cubs upon his father's death in 1932 — and can rattle off the names of his peers through the years: "Branch Rickey and Sam Breadon and Jake Rupert."

He stops when he comes to Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, for it is this first commissioner of baseball who, for Wrigley, seems to symbolize the good old days, and what was so much righter about baseball's operation then.

"Landis would end up in jail today," said Wrigley. In his office overlooking Michigan Boulevard, "I knew the Judge pretty well. His office used to be down the street at 333 South Michigan."

"He used to make arbitrary decisions and people would follow them to the letter because they knew what he did was best for the game. And he only had a three-man staff, including himself."

"Now, the commissioner's office has a bunch of people running around and spending a lot of money. For what?"

"But Landis had authority. When he found out that Cox, the owner of the Phillies, was betting on ball games, he kicked him out of baseball."

He would make a decision on a ball-player and that was it. He couldn't do that today. The ballplayers belong to a union.

"This is the kind of position he held: We had an owners meeting down in New York one day. The Judge had made a decision. I got up and said that that was in direct violation of the National League bylaws."

"He looked at me and said, 'Well, that's just too bad.' And I sat down. It was like the story of the teacher saying, 'The book is wrong.'"

Wrigley came back to the word "owners." He says it is a misnomer now because nearly all the clubs are corporations. And there are so many stockholders — "The Cubs have 500 owners," he said. Many people want to own just one share just to say they own part of a big-league ball team. And one share is now worth about $225.

One of his most troublesome co-owners was a man who held two shares. He sued Wrigley to get lights into Wrigley Field. The case went all the way to the Supreme Court of Illinois a couple of years ago. It cost Wrigley over $40,000 in legal fees to keep the lights out. The stockholder contended that the Cubs would make more money with lights.

Wrigley said, "Wrigley Field is in a working-class residential neighborhood and a lot of people are tired at night from a day's work and can't afford air conditioning so they have to keep their windows open when they sleep."

"And they couldn't sleep if they had crowds screaming and a public address system blasting."

"Besides, fans will come to see a winning team, regardless of whether the games are played in daytime or night."

Wrigley's concern for the fan is genuine. In 1966 he started a three-year multi-million dollar program to widen the box seats. This meant the 10 seats in a box would be reduced to eight. This nearly drove George Halas up the ivy-covered Wrigley Field wall.

Halas owns the Chicago Bears football team, then the lone tenant of the Cubs. Halas had trouble comprehending why PHILLIP K. WRIGLEY, shown 41 years ago with his mother and player-coach Rogers Hornsby, took over the club that season and has served as president ever since.

AN ANGRY LEGION FAN

To whom it may concern:

I read in your paper that American Legion baseball games were supposed to be played at certain times this year and arrived at the field only to find it deserted. Why do you print the schedule wrong?

It is very frustrating trying to find out where a game is being played after it has been moved. This does not happen in my younger boys' little league games, so why should it happen on a level as high as Legion ball?

We like to take our youngsters to Legion games to show them how the game should be played, since it is much easier and less expensive than going to Wrigley Field or Sox Park all the time. Coaches like Jerry Romes (Park Ridge) and Bob Grybasz (Wheeling) seem to know how to handle things and act like gentlemen. Their teams are fun to watch and good for kids. I can't say the same about some of the other coaches and teams in the league (Ninth District).

Please try to get the correct dates and fields printed for games in the future!

An irate fan

Wheeling

We understand your problem. The same thing has happened to us for years — twice this year when we were planning to take pictures of a game and were not able to because the game was moved. All we can do is go by what we receive from the Legion and it is very hard to keep abreast of things when they seem to make several changes almost every day — especially late in each season.

BACKS LEGION CRACKDOWN

Dear Sirs:

I was happy to see that the person who is in charge of American Legion baseball in this area (Gene Sackett) is finally cracking down on the childish actions of some of the coaches. This year, as in past years, I have either seen or heard of some disgraceful outbursts. (As I understand it, the most recent ones this year were by assistant coaches, not head men).

There is no way any umpire should be subject to the personal humiliation and abuse some of them have suffered through. Maybe it is partly the fault of the umpires themselves for being so lenient and not kicking out some of the loud-mouthed hotheads out of the game much sooner.

Anyway, I have been dismayed this year and in the past about the example some coaches set for kids, anywhere from little league through Junior Legion age. American Legion baseball, I have read in their code, claims to teach sportsmanship and at times, this is a joke.

I think the whole problem can be traced to the fact that Legion coaches and players take themselves much too seriously. What do they think they are, the major leagues? The way some of them scream and holler about a close call against them, you'd think it was the World Series. After all, it's only kids playing a game — supposedly for fun.

But again, I commend Mr. Sackett for doing something about a situation that sometimes gets out of hand.

Arlington Heights IRKED BY FRONT-RUNNERS

Dear Sirs:

Well, Chicago fans are showing their true colors again lately, and the colors are coming out pretty ugly. I will bet that out of all sports fans in the Chicago area, at least 90 per cent of them are "fair-weather fans" who jump on the bandwagon when things are going well and run like rats out of a burning house when losses start to pile up.

The fates of both Chicago baseball teams have been pretty much parallel this year. Both started out great and there was much talk about a subway series through April and May. Now, you mention the possibility and all you get is laughs. The Sox started steadily sinking about the start of June, after having a four-game lead, and the Cubs began their skid in July, blowing an eight-game lead.

So now the wolves are howling. Does anybody still have faith? Does anybody still believe either team can rebound?

I still say one or both teams can win their division — yes, even the Sox with Dick Allen about to return and all the other injuries healing.

It is times like this when we find out who the REAL fans are. I hope David Koury, who was so sarcastic and critical in his letter that was printed last week, will read this.

GREATEST GYP

Dear Herald:

Every year there are good players left off the All-Star (baseball) team and complaints, from the player or fan, that he should have made it. So this is nothing new.

But out of all players I can think of who have been slighted, I can never, ever remember one being cheated more than Bill Melton this year. Billy Williams felt he was cheated not to make it last year and not being MVP, and maybe he was right, but that was nothing compared to Melton's snub.

Statistics comparing Melton and Brooks Robinson this year have been printed many times, so I won't bother mentioning them. It was bad enough that Melton did not start at third base, but not to even make the team — this is beyond belief.

What I wanted to say is, I hope and think that Dick Williams' (American League manager) gyping of Melton will come back to haunt Williams. Melton will be more fired up than ever to beat the Athletics' brains out and when he is really motivated, he can hurt somebody bad. So the whole thing may end up helping the White Sox.

I just hope that someday Chuck Tanner manages the A. L. All-Stars and names four or five of his own players to the team and none from Oakland. That would be justice.

10. The Serve (II)

For the toss, the ball is held in the fingers of the left hand, never in the palm. The object is to place the ball in the air with complete accuracy. Accuracy is obtained at the last possible moment, which means when the left arm has straightened and is pointing directly upwards. As the right arm starts its wind-up, the left arm moves upward slowly until it is completely extended. Then the fingertips (thumb and first two fingers) shot-put the ball upward.

The object is to place the ball about six inches to the right and 12 inches in front of the body — to the right because this enables the player to put spin on the serve, and to the front so that the players' weight can move into the ball. The toes should be high enough so that the server can hit it on the center of the racket when arm and racket are fully extended.

For the hit, the racket and arm move to form an almost straight line. The racket trails slightly behind the wrist since the object is to hit the ball with a wrist snap.

Di Fazio challenges Carter

Rocky Di Fazio accepts his reputation as a hard hitting middleweight, but he doesn't want fight fans to think of him as a brawler.

DiFazio meets Jimmy Carter in a 10-round bout at Mill Run Theater Monday night, and he'll be out to prove he can box with a boxer.

"I don't punch wildly," he said. "It's too hard to be accurate, if you do that. I wait to punch until I can throw one that's going to land."

This pattern has worked well so far. DiFazio has knocked out seven of his nine opponents, fought one draw and won a decision, and he has no foreboding about stepping into the ring against a boxer such as Carter.

"Some guys just make you look good," he said, "and I don't know much about Carter. Maybe he'll be one of those."

Carter regards himself as a boxer as well as a puncher and he too will be going into the ring without advance knowledge of the talents of his foe. "I've fought every kind of style there is," he said, "so he's got to be like somebody else I fought."

The puncher-boxer matchup has attracted more attention than any in recent years in Chicago and there may be a near capacity crowd for the scrap. Tickets are on sale at $7 and $10 at Mill Run, Ticketron, and Civic Restaurant, 203 N. LaSalle Street.

Canadian football on Channel 32

"Pro Football from Canada" will now be presented on WFLD TV, Channel 32, Saturday afternoons at 5:30 p.m. beginning Aug. 4.

Former Detroit Lion star Alex Karras handles color commentary on the games. Don Chevrier covers the play-by-play reporting.

The majority of the players on the concerning Canadian teams are former U.S. college stars playing north of the border.

The remaining games to be presented on WFLD TV Saturday afternoons at 5:30 p.m. follows:

Aug. 4—Montreal at Hamilton
Aug. 11—Ottawa at Toronto
Aug. 18—Montreal at Toronto
Aug. 25—Ottawa at Saskatchewan (Regina)

Sept. 1—Calgary at B.C. (Vancouver)

The Canadian football telecast schedule on Channel 32 will close in late November with the 1973 Grey Cup game at Toronto.

Orioles' tryout camp

The Baltimore Orioles will conduct a tryout camp for all college and junior college players at 9 a.m. Saturday at Bowen Park in Waukegan. Players playing legion ball must have a letter from their coach or post commander. The camp will be supervised by Charlie Hlum, regional scout. He will be assisted by camp coordinator and Oriole scout Jerry Houston.

Illinois Range captures berth in Paddock Tournament

Illinois Range put out with the supreme effort Tuesday night and carded a 10-point clean-sweep victory over Morton Pontiac. Inspired by Captain Don Snyder's 39 stroke masterpiece, and George Kratsch's 42 over the tough second nine, it now appears the Rangers will represent the Tuesday Division of the Mount Prospect Twilight League in the Paddock Invitational Tournament.

The big point victory not only put Illinois Range into the Paddock tourney, but with a six and one half spread over the closest pursuer, the largest spread of the season, it gives them a substantial boost toward going all the way to the interdivisional play-offs on Sept. 12 — provided they can survive the Paddock Tournament Jinx.

Louie's Barber Shop came in for some heroics of their own by taking another 10-point victory, this time over the strong Keefer's Pharmacy group. On June 26 Louie's was dead last. Since then they have won 43 points including three 10-point clean-sweeps, and now find themselves firmly in second place, challenging the leaders.

In other matches, J & B Mont Market showed unexpected strength in winning 9-1 over the strong Annen & Busse Realtors team, while Mike's Marathon Service came back to the victory column with a 7½-2½ win over Mount Prospect State Bank.

Busse-Biermann Hardware put together their third successive triumph, defeating George L. Busse Co. 8½-3½, but they couldn't quite lift themselves out of last place despite Licht's Paints narrow 4½-5½ defeat by Kirchhoff Insurance.

Ed Lauling and Jim Werdell tied for low gross honors with 37's, while Werdell's net 29 also took low net. Other low scores were a flock of 39's by B. Mors, W. White, E. Spietzer, B. Bracken, and D. Snyder.

Birdies were reported by B. Bracken No. 1, J. Driscoll no. 8, E. Lauling and J.

Werdell no. 11, H. Panches no. 12 and No. 13, B. Powell no. 13, N. Vetterlik no. 14, B. Mors no. 15 and W. White no. 18.

All-Star game's frustrating for 'unknown' QB

Jim Del Galzo did not play in the College All-Star Game the year he came into pro football. Far from being one of the elite corps of freshman players selected each year to play against the pro champions in the Chicago classic, Del Galzo had to practically beg to get even a chance to look as a pro.

Some look! "In four weeks at the Cincinnati Bengals," he sniffs, "I never even broke a huddle. They never let me run even one dummy play."

But tonight in Chicago's Soldier Field, Del Galzo will suit up as one of the world champion Miami Dolphins. He doesn't figure to play much, but he at least will be there and Cincinnati won't and in his own mind, there's no question he'll be ready.

"I'm ready to be a No. 1 quarterback for some team right now," he says, with a cockiness that is just as calculated as it is inoffensive. He has the kind of ebullient personality that enables him to say such things as "There aren't more than two or three quarterbacks in the pro game who can throw better than I can" without outraging everyone in hearing range.

Also, if you watch him throw the ball in the Dolphins' training camp in Blacayne College, you may begin to believe him. Why, then, has he been relegated to the obscurity of the Dolphins' cab squad for two years while others get to play? That's what Del Galzo would like to know.

"Half the quarterbacks in the league are a bunch of stiff," he maintains. "I can start for half the teams in the league. Who do they have in Denver, or St. Louis, or San Diego or Chicago? Buffalo ought to be ready to ship Dennis Shaw on a slow boat to Siberia."

Never heard of Del Galzo? Well, he went to Syracuse but left after his sophomore year, because: "Larry Csonka was a junior and Floyd Little was a senior and we didn't throw the ball at all. There was absolutely no coaching in my position."

He went down to Tampa where, under Fran Curci, he led a pro-style attack. "We threw the hell out of the ball," he remembers. Then came the abortive tryout with the Bengals. "When they cut me Paul Brown told me I was a very smart quarterback but couldn't throw the ball worth a damn. I couldn't believe it. If there's anything I can do is throw a football."

He admits he can't do much else. He tried to get a job after the Bengals' fiasco and nearly starved to death. His wife convinced him to swallow his pride and try pro football again. He hooked on with the Dolphins two years ago, and made the cab squad with ease. Last year he was activated after Bob Griese got hurt and, in one of his rare appearances, completed four of six passes for 145 yards and two touchdowns against New England.

With Griese at the helm, Del Galzo realizes his chances to play much for the Dolphins are slim. So he'd like to be traded. "I know that they'll try to showcase me in the exhibition season," he says.

He's been promised a start later in the pre-season, but what better showcase to begin than the nationally televised All-Star contest in Chicago?

Mid-Teen leader falls

Rain played havoc with a portion of this week's Des Plaines Mid-Teen schedule but it didn't come soon enough for Weber, former leaders of the National division.

Weber dropped into second place behind Sellergren when it couldn't field a complete team against Kunkel on Wednesday.

On the other diamond at Malne West, Sellergren and First National were postponed to Sunday when rain hit during the fourth inning.

So by not playing and remaining 4-2, Sellergren slipped ahead of Weber which has a 4 1/2-2 1/2 National record. Kunkel, first half champs, is 3-4 and First National 1 1/2-4 1/2.

In American Division games, first half champ Allens put together a fine 3-0 shutout over Optimists. Johnson beat winless Bantam, 7-3, to maintain a one-game lead over Allens in the American division.

OLSEN BLANKS OPTIMISTS, 3-0
Jim Olsen never let a batter reach second base as he pitched Allens to a four-hit, 3-0 victory over Optimists. Olsen struck out seven and walked just two.

Rich Slapko got Allens out to an uncatchable lead when he belted a two-run homer in the first. Mike Paul was on base via an error.

Jeff Myers scored on Dave Sullivant's balk to give Allens its third run in the fourth. Myers and Ted Godawski had singled after one out.

Sullivant, who also tossed a complete game, was the losing pitcher for Optimists. He struck out five and walked two.

Quinn Haase picked up two singles against Olsen. Dean Harrison and Tony Cabello had one hit apiece.

JOHNSON KEEPS LEAD, 7-3
Johnson maintained his one-game American division lead over Allens by turning back Bantam, 7-3. Johnson has a 6-1 second half record with Allens one game back.

Two first inning runs crisscrossed for Johnson on no hits, a walk and two errors. Bantam countered with a run in the home first on singles by Rich Fredone, Mike Gavin and Bill Makuch.

Johnson stretched his lead to 5-1 through two innings. Dave Hawking's walk preceded singles by winning pitcher Mike Kelley, Gary Slipko and Ralph Amelio.

Rich Smek doubled and came home on Amelio's bases loaded fielders choice for a 6-1 lead in the fourth. Johnson's final run came in the fifth when Ken Ford singled, stole two bases and scored on a wild pitch.

Bantam scored twice in the sixth. Al Mueller walked, Makuch tripled and Bill Bellen singled.

Kelley was the winning pitcher for Johnson even though the club scored five runs while Steve Zuccarini was pitching. He went just two innings, however, while Kelley tossed the last four. Bantam pitched Bellen, Mueller and Makuch two innings apiece. Bellen was the loser.

Lake County Rifles open with exhibition victory

The Lake County Rifles opened the 1973 football season Saturday with a 13-0 exhibition game win over the Manitowoc Chiefs.

Manitowoc has been hailed as the best team in the Northern Division of the Central States Football League while Rifles' coach Bob Franz has been saying his team is four to five weeks away from reaching top shape.

Both Rifles touchdowns were scored on sensational pass catches by rookie A. J. Owens from Northwestern University. Both times he leaped high into the air to take in the pass.

The first score came at 5:57 of the first quarter on a nine-yard pass from quarterback Bob Berezowicz to climax a 52-yard drive. Clifford Boyd, the league's rookie of the year last season, made a nice 16-yard run during the charge.

Then in the second quarter rookie quarterback Rocky Self from Texas A & M engineered a 26-yard drive climaxed by a 15-yard pass play to Owens, who gathered in the ball on the three-yard line and raced into the end zone with 8:58 left in the period.

Al McNeil, the Rifles' leading scorer last year, made the extra point.

Just before the half ended, Self faded back to pass but, finding nobody open, he decided to run in what turned out to be one of the most exciting plays ever seen in Carmel Field.

Thirteen blocks were thrown by the Rifles in a run that took Self 10 seconds and ended with the ball on the Manitowoc five-yard line. The next play ended the half as Self completed a pass to Bill Trapp on the three-yard line.

Lake County's defense, the best in the league last season, was superb Saturday. The Rifles cut off the passing attack of quarterback Jesse Kaye, the outstanding offensive player in the league last season, and Tom Lange, the best receiver last year.

Thirteen times the Rifles stopped Manitowoc on plays from inside the Rifles' 10-yard line, including four plays from the one-yard line.

Bruce Hart, a defensive halfback, played a very steady game at his position. The most spectacular defensive plays came from linebacker Bruce Heigstedt, who threw the Manitowoc backs for large losses.

Franz said he was pleased with the Rifles rushing game, particularly the play of rookie back Abe Brown from the University of Hawaii, and with the receivers. The defense, he said, looked good. But he added that the Rifles have to improve their timing.

Musical 'pardners'

Headin' the country route

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS resident Ray Scott has teamed up with Jeff Stevens of Antioch and together, the two play a mixture of light rock to flat country and Western. Recently, they cut a record, "Song Our Partner Sang," and hope in the near future to come out with an entire country album. Next week they are opening at Gullaby's in Schaumburg.

by GENIE CAMPBELL
It requires more than a temporary let-down to pierce the zeal and fervor of one Ray Scott who in a matter of years has traveled the gamut of musical circles — from hard rock to folk to flat country and Western.

While not always headed in a definite direction, one thing is certain. Ray's career has never lulled for want of action. Waiting for something to happen is simply not the name of his game.

Ray can entertain an audience not only with his current blend of country rock, but also through recalling his past experiences over a musical route that included almost a four-year hitch with the Ides of March during their real heyday when "Vehicle" graced the top of the record charts.

THE ACQUAINTANCE ended rather abruptly when Ray came home to Arlington Heights for a visit and was never contacted and told when to return. So much for instant fame and fortune . . . Ray only laughs.

The local musician, a St. Viator graduate, prefers looking ahead anyhow, and right now the future looks indeed promising for his present course as a country and Western duo with Jeff Stevens, a guitarist from Antioch, Ill., whom Ray met at a jam session and discovered "our musical talents were very similar."

It ended a two-year stint for Ray going it alone as a vocalist/guitarist.

Though the two first formed a group, Harvest, in a matter of months problems arose, everything folded and Ray and Scott were on their own. And that's how they prefer it.

RAY DOES ALL the singing, but Jeff enters in with a lot of the fancy plucking and together they turn out a very impressive rendition of "Foggy Mountain Breakdown," which is played later, into the second or even third set of an evening. By then the diehards have all assembled and the inexperienced listeners have loosened up enough to be attracted to the rhythm.

For the fact remains, flat country and Western is still not wholly accepted . . . in the South and West, of course, but not in such sophisticated surroundings as the Northwest suburbs of Chicago where youth have been born and bred on acid rock. Country is still being too closely associated with "hillbilly," though to borrow a line from Bob Dylan, "Times They Are A Changin'."

"Music really is in a state of limbo right now," agree Ray and Jeff, who are finishing up an engagement at the Rusty Scupper and will shortly open at Gullaby's in Schaumburg.

"IN THE NEXT FIVE years it will be difficult to predict what people will like," continued Ray.

The fading of the acid rock has opened the door to a lot of soloists and duos like Ray and Jeff who pad strong country and Western with a little folk ("If I Was a Carpenter") and old rock and roll favorites borrowed from Chuck Berry and Jerry Lee Lewis.

"The country field itself is so varied now," said Ray, who added that even the standby dress that once included narrow lapels, string necktie and conservative haircut is no more.

Rock, folk, country and Western artists . . . they are all presently indistinguishable by stage appearances.

BUT FLAT country and Western is what Ray and Jeff hope to eventually get into exclusively, and they enjoy doing a lot of their own material but chancing it only when the room is filled with appreciative foot-stomping fans. (Yes, the boys do have their own fan club.)

They have already cut a single together, "Song Our Partner Sang," composed by Karl Davis, a familiar name on the country scene who years ago made a name for himself on the WLS Midwest Barn Dance, a program that preceded and led the way for the popular Grand Old Opry.

Davis contributed to the careers of Chet Atkins and the Everly Brothers and now Jeff and Ray, who are urging the Chicago musician, still a record turner for WLS, to come out and sing with them.

"Song Our Partner Sang" recorded by Stature records is not expected to make a big splash. Record sales are not heavy.

"It's gone as far as it can. It's broken the ice and that's all we wanted," said Mike Conskline, Ray and Jeff's manager, who resides in Rolling Meadows.

"NASHVILLE is beginning to talk to us . . . a great bunch of people but they are really cliquish. I really can't say anything now, but it does look very promising for cutting a whole album."

Ray and Jeff are at the Rusty Scupper located in the O'Hare Plaza, 5725 N. East River Road, tonight and tomorrow. Next Thursday they open at Gullaby's at 829 W. Higgins Road in Schaumburg for an indefinite engagement. They will play three nights a week, Thursday through Saturday.

Unique touring program for kids

Kaleidoscope shows small fry art can be fun

by GENIE CAMPBELL

"It was the funnest place I ever went to."

"It's more gooder than recess."

"I liked Kaleidoscope because you can't do anything wrong."

A world where the artistic urges of children can break loose has been rolled in and set up for a week's duration at Our Lady of The Wayside School at 432 S. Ridge, Arlington Heights.

The creative, touring art program for children in grades 1 through 6 is being presented as a public service by Hallmark Cards, Inc. and brought to Arlington Heights in cooperation with the Arlington Heights Park District, Junior Woman's Club and Our Lady of the Wayside School.

HALLMARK THREE years ago embarked upon developing Kaleidoscope after president Donald Hall saw a children's participatory art show and asked his designers and craftsmen to expand the concept and develop a unique, traveling program for children.

Left behind is the six-foot tall world of adults for a rainbow-hued child-size environment.

Children sit on yellow stools 18 inches off the floor, work at tables 25 inches high and peer at mirrored images of themselves through windows set at a level which even a small fry can reach on tiptoe.

Bells, beads and bangles dangle from the entrance archway that is a mere five feet high — the maximum height used in Kaleidoscope.

Individual creativity is expressed through the program which includes an idea room where children are stimulated by color design, texture and sound and a studio workshop where children create their own works of art using melted crayon, felt, bright colored yarn, plastic and different kinds of paper. Children keep all the art projects they make. Hallmark donates all the supplies, approximately one ton per week.

"EVERY CHILD has the imagination and the desire to express himself with color, shape and design," said Janice Tapper, associate director of the program in Arlington Heights.

"At Kaleidoscope the child learns some of the techniques of art and he has fun at the same time. The challenge of learning and doing becomes an enjoyable experience."

"Each child is exposed to the sights, sounds and touches of his world in an idea room," continued Miss Tapper. "In the workshop children are encouraged to build or create — to express themselves using familiar and simple objects and techniques.

"Children can become their own artists if they are given an opportunity and the encouragement to be creative."

This is the first time Kaleidoscope has visited Chicagoland. On weekdays the program is committed to scheduled groups or children with reservations that are being taken through Olympic Park.

PARENTS ARE invited to bring their children tomorrow or Sunday, however, on a first come, first served basis. Kaleidoscope can accommodate 55 children per session and each session continues one hour.

Parents are invited to view Kaleidoscope on the half hour.

Weekend hours are 9 a.m. through noon and 1 until 5 p.m. tomorrow and Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m.

CHILDREN WHO participate in Kaleidoscope, a creative, touring art program introduced by Hallmark Cards, enter a special work room where they are free to cut, paste and color. The program is here for one week. It opened Wednesday at Our Lady of Wayside School and will continue through next Thursday. Reservations are not necessary over the weekend.

IN THE IDEA room, children let their imaginations run free. Young Deena Krundick pretends she's an artist.

Next door, she can peek through the billboard and see herself as Lucy, the famous "Peanuts" character.

Darn clever, those Chinese and Japanese! Orientalia is very big in the antiques world, as more and more persons discover that a fat Ho Tai smiling Buddha makes a good "conversation piece," or that an Imari plate lends a bright note of color on a wall.

Oriental accessories go well with almost any style of furniture, from modern to Early American. With Early American or Colonial, they're a natural, for almost all the decorative wares our early ancestors prized came from China or Japan or other Eastern countries.

Chinese or "Turkish" rugs were used extensively and may be seen on all the floors at such restorations as Colonial Williamsburg. Potteries and porcelains came to be known as "China" because that's where they were first made and imported into England and America. Much early china, in fact, was used on ships as ballast for more valuable cargo, and reached the hands of our eastern forebears almost accidentally, but it was prized and handed down.

SHOWN ARE five collectibles in the Oriental manner, clockwise: A soapstone Buddha, an Imari plate, a teakwood rickshaw, a tiny Ivory Netsuke and a little cloisonne incense pot on a teakwood base.

The soapstone Buddha was carved, in China probably, in imitation of the more delicate and much more expensive Jades. Soapstone is relatively soft and may be easily scratched, as was this particular piece when I received it. A light coating of oil rubbed well covers the scratches, however.

The Imari plate is a product of Japan, which has been shipping from the port of Imari for 300 years. This is a gaudily painted porcelain, with designs usually red and blue florals with green foliage. This plate is probably from about 1880, but since they are being heavily reproduced, it is best to buy only from a reputable dealer and to get a guarantee of age. I knew the house and collection that mine had come from, and that is an old one. New products are relative lightweight and "slicker," but, as I've said before, it is difficult to compare without examples of both old and new at hand.

THE TEAKWOOD rickshaw is a puzzle, both in design and origin. It comes apart in several pieces and is tricky to put back together. I would guess its origin as Chinese, but its age is indeterminate. It could be only 50 years or so.

I've spoken of Netsuke before in these columns. Pronounced in two syllables (Netski), the word means a small fastener or counterweight for a money purse, worn by men in the Orient. Most are of bone or ivory, some of wood or jade. Many of these seen in shops and shows date back to the 1600s, but the one shown is a late 1800 example. These too are being made today, with coarse and shallow detail.

The last item is a miniature covered pot of cloisonne of very fine work, with close cloisons. The cloisons, or cells, are of thin bright wire, usually of copper, silver or gold, filled with enamel in delicate patterns, then polished smooth. Cloisonne is also an ongoing art in the Orient, and some of the new products are very beautiful. It is never inexpensive.

I SPOKE OF Oriental rugs. This is a field of collecting all its own, and one must be very sure of himself before investing the large prices rugs bring today. Many persons believe they have an Oriental rug made by hand, when it is actually a machine-made American copy. Examine rugs on the reverse side. The colors and patterns should go all the way through and can be seen very clearly, and the very fine hand-made stitches may be counted, sometimes as many as 200 to the square inch. As I said, it is not a simple subject, but there are many good books on rugs available and examples may be seen in most museums and restorations.

If you have a question, please write Grace Carolyn Dahlberg, in care of Padlock Publications, Suburban Living, Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60006.

"CELEBRATE THE SUN"
by JAMES KAVANAUGH

Nash, $4.95

Harry Langendorf Pelican? That's right. If the work ethic's got you down, if you're tired of always seeking perfection, forget that single-minded seagull and come over to Harry Langendorf Pelican.

Taking an allegory from the aviary that produced Jonathan Livingston Seagull, author James Kavanaugh has come up with the story of a pelican who reaches the heights and then asks — is it worth all the trouble?

Kavanaugh's "Celebrate the Sun" follows Harry Langendorf from his "portentous" birth as he rises to become the big bird of his colony. Unlike the ascetic Jonathan, who was cast out and sought perfection before returning to the flock in another form, Harry is both gifted pelican and model citizen. Of course he can fly higher, dive faster, fish better. But he's also a family bird. Beautiful wife, two lovely kids, a real success.

As acknowledged leader of the colony, he's a savior, an uplifter. "We've been

HARRY LANGENDORF PELICAN

Harry comes apart. He begins to think maybe he's scooped up more than he can swallow. "Competition," says Harry, "has not me happy."

If this sounds like nonsense, remember that Richard Bach's Jonathan has sold millions in hardcover and paperback and will soon be a successful movie. Two other recent take-offs on Jonathan ("Jonathan Segal Chicken" and "Ludwig von Wolfgang Vulture") have provided some much-needed satire but don't challenge the damaging philosophical message some have seen in Bach's seagull saga.

Kavanaugh, an ex-priest who has written several volumes of poetry, including "There Are Men Too Gentle To Live Among Wolves," and two books about the church, brings a counterculture response to Jonathan's Puritan work ethic. In the bird metaphor, it is Jonathan's single-mindedness, his messianic complex, his Don Quixote approach to life which become objectionable. It may be true that the gull who sees farthest flies highest, but most birds have to find a way to live happily within their own limitations. The loneliness of the long-distance flyer isn't for everybody. How often does history produce a Charles Lindbergh Albatross or a Jonathan Livingston Seagull?

(KAVANAUGH WILL be at Walden book Store at 1 p.m. tomorrow in the Woodfield shopping center, Schaumburg.

by Tom Von Malder

Leon Russell is a good performer, a fine singer and an even better writer — particularly considering he's a white man singing the black blues. Yet time after time he makes it work.

However, even for Leon the one-hour, 45-minute length of "Leon Live" (Shelter STCO-8917) is a bit much. The three-record set, while it may be an accurate reflection of his in-concert performance, could easily have been pared down to two records and improved its punch.

It seems almost a waste to have a whole side of the album devoted to a "Jumpin' Jack Flash/Youngblood" medley that was already done — and live too — on "The Concert For Bangla Desh" album. Russell, who coproduced the album with Denny Cordell (as always), could have cut this side out and also deleted the songs by the black group, Black Grass, who have just come out with their own album.

The album starts off in high gear with a "Mighty Quinn" medley that also includes "I'll Take You There." The cut shows Russell in complete control as performer, stage manager and master of ceremonies. When he says clap your hands, you feel like clapping. It's like all the best from a gospel show — high energy, foot stompin' emotion and a very satisfying after feeling.

Russell then slides into one of his better boogie songs, "Shoot Out On the Plantation." Indeed, most of Russell's better known songs are included, among them "Delta Lady," "Surprisingly though, 'Tightrope' and 'Song For You' are left out.

YOU MAY NOT be able to take this whole album in one sitting, but in small doses it's solid blues-rock. The album is filled with color photos, by the way, including a very striking cover of Russell without glasses.

Master song stylist and refreshing newcomer — that's what "The Love We Have/The Love We Had" (Mercury SRM1-680) has going for it in its stars Jerry Butler and Brenda Lee Eager.

Butler is the smoother of this new soul duo. But Miss Eager has a very engaging approach to her singing. The album, their first together after three successful singles, is a concept one with one side about falling in love and enjoying it and the other about when love has become a chore.

Musically, I find the second, bitter-sweet side the more appealing. It has songs such as "How Long Will It Last" and "The Love We Had Stays On My Mind" which are soul at its sophisticated best. "Take Me In Your Arms (Rock Me A Little While)" also is found here with a background surprisingly similar to the Blood, Sweat & Tears arrangement on their fourth album.

Throughout the album, the full orchestration is a definite plus for which producer/arranger Bobby Bowles gets credit. The first side, considerably weaker, has its moments too, moments like "Lean On Me" (not the Bill Withers tune).

AS DUOS ARE big in country and soul music, I expect several more albums from Butler and Miss Eager. Their partnership has had an encouraging beginning. Hopefully though, Butler won't abandon his solo career. We need more songs like his "Only the Strong Survive."

The latest of the soul music soundtracks is "Super Fly T.N.T." (Buddah BDS-6138). It may be the best one to date since Curtis Mayfield's "Super Fly" score. Certainly the two albums justify the movies' existence.

"T.N.T." is music composed, arranged and performed by the African jazz/rock group Osibisa. The album passes the test of any soundtrack record — it stands on its own without visual memories from the movie helping along the filler spots. That's because there are no filler spots.

Each cut on this album, with the possible exception of "Prophets," could easily stand on its own as a good, solid song or instrumental. The best track is "La I La I La" which features tight vocal harmony and an involving African beat. Other strong songs are "T.N.T.," "Oye Mama" and "Brotherhood."

"T.N.T." is the strongest album from Osibisa and should help broaden the group's following. It is also a strong indication that rock and movie scoring are compatible.

Apology. Through a mixup, last week's picture of Joe Walsh got labeled with Roger McGuinn's name.

horeay with Jonathan Livingston Sragull fanatics.)

Kavanaugh's hero becomes a beach-comber and sort of recreation director after his son's death. Harry gives up his leadership role in the colony and his wife, unable to cope with the loss of status, leaves him. He takes an interest in the island's lesser birds, leading pleasant tours up the coast and occasionally showing off his old flying and fishing talents.

Harry Langford is lonely, but he gets along, relishing the small things. He finds a new mate and founds a colony away from the striving and discontent his former followers have caused. And then he dies. Before Harry goes, he looks back, a happy pelican. "I had good friends. That is enough," he says.

The name John Creasey usually means excitement. His books successfully combine suspense with foreign intrigue but the latest one, "Theft of the Magna Carta" (Charles Scribner's Sons, $5.95), has neither. The plot moves slowly and the climax is easily predicted.

The book opens with a conversation between two international art thieves discussing the value of the Sarum Magna Carta. Frank Caldwell seems appalled that Neil Stephenson would presume to set a price on such a piece of history but soon gets drawn into Neil's plans to steal the famous copy from Salisbury Cathedral.

They enlist the unwilling help of Det. Sgt. Tom Batten by kidnapping Batten's mistress, policewoman Linda Prell. Too bad for the thieves, however, because Batten has called in Chief Supt. Roger West of Scotland, who predictably saves the day.

EARLY IN the book, Creasey allows his characters to spend too much time talking. The crowding of all this background material spoils the unraveling process. The eager reader is bogged down by too many conversations.

Creasey's new fall books, one under the pen name of Jeremy York, will be among the best of this first-rate writer, who died June 9, in Salisbury, England (the setting of "The Theft of the Magna Carta") at age 64. He wrote more than 500 books, creating such famous characters as Toff, the Baron detective, and Chief Inspector Gideon of Scotland Yard. He also used the pen names Anthony Morton, Michael Halliday, Norman Deane, J. J. Marris and others, selling more than 60 million books.

Using a South African setting, James McClure has written an extremely fast-paced and exciting mystery, "The Caterpillar Cop," (Harper and Row, $5.95). He lays out a series of seemingly unrelated incidents which eventually fall into place at the same time for both the reader and the cops.

The opening scene is especially enticing. A boy and girl who leave a tennis club dance "to look at the city at night" spot a boy watching them from a tree. They look closer and find he's dead.

Following this discovery of what appears to be a senseless sex killing, Lt. Temple Kramer of the South African Murder Squad learns that poor dead Boetie belonged to a Detective Club and "being a detective was one sure way of getting yourself thoroughly disliked."

The characters come on realistically, moving quickly, sometimes through a comedy of the unexpected. The reader is given credit for being able to make some deductions on his own.

This is McClure's second South African novel. His interplay between the black and white detective forces provides an interesting subplot.

At lunch, Sampson Trehune skeptically discusses his upcoming operation with his friend, Dr. Robert Abel. Nothing unusual except that Sampson is deaf, the discussion is in sign language and the operation will be done with acupuncture. Dwight Steward's "The Acupuncture Murders" (Harper and Row, $5.95) is a good novel.

Sampson is one of two participants in a demonstration by Henri Volson, a leading Western acupuncturist, to a group of sympathetic doctors and one outspoken woman journalist. Because acupuncture is not legally recognized in the United States the gathering itself is potentially dangerous. When Harrison Wolberg, the other participant, dies, the danger becomes real.

At first it seems Wolberg died of a heart attack. An autopsy becomes necessary when Volson swears that wasn't the true cause. The real excitement begins when an extra needle appears.

The background against which Steward writes his mystery is both entertaining and informative. The world of the hearers to the deaf can be amusing and the author gives insights which only careful study could provide. The two years he spent researching have left him with a superior story.

MEMBERS OF THE COMMUNITY ARTS League of Wheeling and Buffalo Grove admire a donated painting to be given away in a drawing Sunday, Aug. 5, during an art fair in Wheeling. The craft and art exhibition is just one part of the Wheeling annual "Brat n' Beer Fest." Viewing the painting are Mrs. Rita Mohacs, Mrs. Barbara Sharp, Mrs. Sylvia Westgard, president, Mrs. Pat Ketzal and Mrs. Jean Bruhn.

Art fair part of Wheeling beer fest

Final preparations are being made for an art fair hosted by the Community Arts League of Wheeling and Buffalo Grove as a part of the annual Wheeling "Brat n' Beer Fest" taking place Aug. 5. More than 75 artists and craftsmen from the Chicago area will be competing for a number of purchase and cash awards. Judges of the art fair include Myrtle Fitterer, art teacher at Cooper Junior High School; Jacqueline Rapp of Countryside Gallery in Arlington Heights; and Donald Wheeler of Riverwoods, a commercial artist and illustrator.

The art festival is being held in conjunction with the "Brat n' Beer Fest" that begins at 2 p.m. a week from Sunday in the Wheeling Trust and Savings Bank parking lot.

LOTS OF BRATWURST, sauerkraut, sweet corn and German potato salad will be on hand along with plenty of beer. Last year's fest-goers drank up 40 half barrels of beer and consumed 3000 bratwurst. And this year's festival committee is expecting the record to be broken... particularly if it's a hot day.

Participating in the art fair from Wheeling are Sue Robertson, Jean Bruhn, Tom Staples, Fred Stueckerman, Russell Baker, Mary Ann Randolph, Arla Bradow and Bill Malloy.

Also, Linda A. Bauer, Diana Jo Mundt, Charles Guarino, Madonna Stricker, Shirley Hogberg, Lois Williams and Tobl Abrams.

Arlington Heights residents exhibiting are Jeanne Perricone, Dorothy Anderson, Ed Jirasek and Palanda Graves.

OTHER PARTICIPANTS from the area include Dorothy Gosse and Lorraine Beupre of Elk Grove; Dick Erickson, Donna Lichner, Robert Lichner, all of Palatine; Sandra Fredrickson of Schaumburg; Halcyon Peters of Des Plaines; Joann Whitlock of Hoffman Estates; and Pat Weststrom and Dee Schmidt, both of Mount Prospect.

Buffalo Grove artists entering their work include Art Faulstich, Pat Ketzal, Ted Uskali, Sylvia Westgard, Sonny Reckles, Lily Megill, Rita Mohacs and Barbara Sharp.

Close off streets for art fair in downtown Palatine Aug. 5

Three streets in downtown Palatine will be closed off to traffic on Sunday, Aug. 5, for the all-day art fair sponsored by the Downtown Palatine Merchants Association.

More than 100 exhibitors from Illinois and surrounding states are expected to display their arts and crafts in the area of Broadway, Slade and Railroad from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Irene "Rae" Partridge of Barrington, director of the show, said there will be ample parking for visitors and refreshments will be available. Admission is free.

Ribbons, cash awards and purchase awards will be given. Mrs. Jean Hoegler of Palatine, assistant professor of art at Trinity College in Deerfield and owner of Randhurst Art Gallery, will judge entries. The purchase award will be given by Palatine National Bank and will be selected by a representative of the bank, said Mrs. Partridge.

TV affects home design

The 21-inch color television and pro football have had a profound effect on the configuration of American homes, according to a home designer.

Television plays a large role in the popularity of "family rooms," especially big family rooms, says Spencer Hart, design executive of U.S. Home Corp., Clearwater, Fla.

"The family room of the '70s has replaced the living room of the 1950s as the family gathering place," Hart said, adding that "most home buyers want big family rooms that can handle leisure activity of Mom and Dad — and all the kids." (UPI)

Folksinger pursuing her dream

by GENIE CAMPBELL

Last week I ran into a friend of mine, BONNIE YATES. She was singing in the BLACK FOX and though I hadn't seen her in over three years, I knew she was around . . . regularly singing not only in the immediate suburban area but also at several popular Chicago pubs.

It was nice to see her and even better . . . to hear her perform.

She's a contemporary folksinger presenting a wide variety of material, though she avoids the day's hits, the ones you hear over and over again on the car radio.

Bonnie likes soft, quiet tunes, or happy ones that have something to say. "If it's a good song, then I'll do it" is her way of picking them. And she writes some of her own, such as "I Like the Way You Call Me Lady," dedicated to "someone special."

When I first met Bonnie, she was a nurse for Alexian Brothers, performing on the guitar and singing whenever she got the chance, mostly at parties or for friends.

Whistfully she mentioned then how she would like to make a career out of her music. And now she has, though she still works part-time for a doctor in Des Plaines.

The practical nurse and folksinger, who currently resides in Barrington, has a backup guitarist by the name of MARTIN KOPPEL, also of Barrington, who though the brunt of much of Bonnie's on-stage humor, is a personality in himself . . . and also a darn good musician.

Bonnie and Martin will be playing at the GROUND ROUND in Hoffman Estates on Friday and Saturday evenings during August. They will return to the BLACK FOX in the Rolling Meadows Holiday Inn for performances Aug. 19, 20, 26 and 27.

And if she's had her cereal for the day, a must for Bonnie, she might be in the mood to do "Punky's Dilemma . . ." oh, I wish I was a Kellogg's cornflake . . ."

What is the RUSTY SCUPPER? It's a new restaurant lounge located in the O'Hare Plaza adjacent to the Chicago Marriott.

The side entrance is unobtrusive enough but once inside, you immediately feel you've entered the hull of a huge ship.

A delicatessen where you can make up your own kind of sandwich is open for lunch on weekdays.

Otherwise the emphasis is on a dinner menu of steak and seafood and quite, folksy entertainment in the lounge every Thursday through Saturday.

This is the first Scupper to open in the Midwest though there are seven in California and four on the East Coast. The menu is printed on mini wooden paddles, another idea to further accent the ship motif.

Yet even more unusual, everyone associated with Rusty Scupper Inc. (the first restaurant opened in San Francisco only two years ago) is quite young. The oldest owner is 40 and most persons connected with the management have not even hit the 30 mark. JIM MILLER (he's a good example) is the general manager of the new local Scupper.

I mentioned last week that the BLUE MAX in the HYATT REGENCY O'HARE would be re-opening Sept. 7 with EDIE ADAMS and musician PETE CANDOLI.

But now looking even farther ahead, expected attractions will include FRANK SINATRA JR. Sept. 24-Oct. 6 and KAYE STEVENS with comedian JEREMY VERNON Oct. 8-20. A former teenage idol, FRANKIE AVALON, will be appearing in November.

Upon closing Aug. 5 at ARLINGTON PARK THEATRE, "PRIVATE LIVES," the Noel Coward comedy starring BARBARA RUSH and LOUIS JOURDAN, will open for a one-week engagement in Washington, D. C. SID CAESAR and IMOGENE COCA will open Aug. 10 in "THE PRISONER OF SECOND AVENUE." And though nothing has been definitely decided there is a chance that producer DAVID LONN will be bringing the ROYAL SHAKESPEAREAN COMPANY from England to perform at Arlington when "Second Avenue" closes.

THE FREE STREET THEATER, a traveling troupe sponsored by the Illinois Arts Council, will perform in Palatine tonight. The free show, planned for 7 p.m. in the parking lot at Greeley and Slade streets, will feature acting, singing and dancing.

TV spawns movie talent

by DICK KLEINER

Currently shooting in Hollywood is a movie with the tentative title of "Newman," which shows how important TV has become in training new talent for the big screen.

"Newman" stars George Peppard, whose Banachek series for NBC has made him once again a hot feature film property. His costar is Roger Robinson, who hit it big as the drug addict in "The Marcus-Nelson Murders," the exceptionally fine TV movie.

Producing "Newman" is Richard Irving, who came out of TV—he produced the first Columbo and parts of "The Name of the Game"—and the director of Richard Heffron.

"I directed three Banacheks and Toma, a pilot for a new series which has sold," Heffron says. "This is my first feature. I think the Banacheks helped me get this job, because George and I got along so well."

ROGER ROBINSON, who plays Peppard's detective-partner in this police movie, credits "Marcus-Nelson" with his big push. Out of that he got a leading role in "Willie Dynamite" and now "Newman."

He comes from a Seattle suburb called Bellevue which he says was a good place for a black youngster to grow up in—it was almost like living in the country. His father worked in a steel mill but wanted to be a singer and he thinks that may be one reason his parents divorced when he was six.

His mother raised the children and, after they were grown, she went to college, got her degree, and now is an elementary school teacher.

"She's proud of me," Robinson says, "but I'm more proud of her."

He wanted to act and tried Hollywood when he was very young, but all he could get was extra jobs. So he went into the Navy.

"I PLAYED the oboe in the admiral's band at the Brooklyn Navy Yard," he says. "and I studied acting in New York whenever I could."

He did many off-Broadway plays. After his discharge he came out to Hollywood again and made a movie. It was such a disaster he won't even name the film—"It was a horrendous experience, the people weren't nice and the picture was a bomb."

HIS NEW FILM career is different. He says he's been working with nice people like Telly Savalas and Peppard.

"George is the complete pro," he says. "He knows so much about this business I think he'd make a great director."

He still lives in New York and, now

pro." Success on television opened up film opportunities for both actors.

that he has some money, he's planning to indulge himself—travel and learn to play the piano.

"Having money," he says, "gives me the time and the capital to do a few things I've always wanted to do. Otherwise, the money isn't important—I did without it for so long that it doesn't mean that much any more."

Serving as technical adviser (T.A.) for "Newman" is a burly ex-Los Angeles Police Department sergeant named Dick Reed. He has worked with Peppard before.

When George did "The Pendulum" in '68, he rode with Reed for a few weeks to get the feel of police work. Reed remembers the day when he was trailing some bank robbers who used machine guns. Peppard was riding with him that day.

"I TOLD GEORGE," Reed says, "that if there was any action he should get the hell out of the way. We got a call another bank had been hit so we went over there. I told George to get lost."

"My partner and I went into the bank. I turned around and there was Peppard, a shotgun in his hands, guarding one of the exits. He was doing it right, too. Luckily, the gang had left. But he had seen there was an unguarded exit so he had picked up the shotgun and gone to work."

When Reed retired, Peppard called him and asked him to come in and help the writers with the "Newman" script and he's stuck around as T.A. He's found a few mistakes and earned his pay. He likes it.

Russian educators see TV's 'Sesame,' 'Electric Company'

Nine leading educators from the Soviet Union recently showed up at the Children's Television Workshop to take a look at "Sesame Street" and "The Electric Company," the two educational programs produced by the workshop.

They were the first Russians to visit the set of "Sesame Street" on Manhattan's West Side and were specially delighted with a character from the show named Sam the Robot, who on the day of their visit was struggling to learn the letter "E."

The delegation, from the U.S.S.R. Academy of Pedagogical Sciences, visited CTW as part of a two-week seminar on educational technology held under the current bilateral exchange program between U.S. and Soviet educators.

Because of their interest in television in early education, the Russians watched both programs and discussed them with workshop officials. "Sesame Street" is now being seen by an estimated 9 million youngsters in the United States and millions more in 43 other nations around the globe; "The Electric Company" is being seen by about 6 million children in the United States and several Caribbean nations.

Water Olympics

Cool off with these watery Olympic games in a nearby pool.

Standing Splash Jump: Players line up along the edge of the pool. See who can jump into the water at a point farthest from the pool edge.

Kick and Push: Two players face each other in the water across a big rubber ball, innertube or kick board. Both players hold it tightly. When the starter calls "Go!", each player tries to force the other back to the edge of the pool by pushing the ball and flutter kicking. Winner is the one who succeeds.

Balloonathon: Players stand in the water near one edge of the pool. One balloon per player floats near the other edge of the pool. At the signal, players swim to the balloons, grab one and head back. Winner is the first swimmer to get back to the starting point with a balloon.

Jumpalong: Players begin the race in the water near one edge of the pool. They must reach the opposite side by jumping. No swimming, walking or running allowed!

Mr. and Mrs. Brian Holan

Mt. Prospect newlyweds greet guests in garden

The groom's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Waryck of Mount Prospect, hosted a garden reception when Susan Sommers and Brian Holan were married July 5. After the 3 p.m. service in St. Zachary Church, the wedding guests were invited to the Waryck home on Robert Drive for dinner and dancing.

Susan, daughter of Mrs. Lori Tyrcha of Bensenville, was given in marriage by her brother, Tom Tyrcha of Addison.

Brian is the son of the Frank Holans of 1307 Robert Drive, who live next door to the grandparents hosting the wedding reception.

MRS. PAULA MEYER of Lake Zurich was Susan's matron of honor, while two of her grade school friends, Mrs. Patti O'Keefe, Rolling Meadows, and Mrs. Chris Vaughn, Chicago, served as bridesmaids.

Also in the bridal procession was the bride's niece, Lori Tyrcha, 6, as flower girl and Jason Sommers, 4, the bride's son, as ring bearer.

Jason was dressed as a miniature of the groom in a brown and white tuxedo with orange shirt and brown velvet bow tie.

The bridal attendants were gowned alike in orange and white floral printed voile with bishop sleeves, V neckline, and Empire waist all accented with white linen trim. They wore white straw picture hats banded with the orange and white floral print and carried orange roses, white carnations and orange baby's breath.

AS SUSAN CAME down the aisle she wore a white organza gown with Empire bodice overlaid in Venice lace floral appliques and bishop sleeves topped with the lace. The high ruffled neck and cuffs of the long sleeves were also edged in lace as was the chapel train.

A Camelot headpiece of matching lace held Susan's fingertip veil in place, and she carried a large nosegay of orange roses, white baby's breath and stephanotis.

The little flower girl preceded her down the aisle dressed in a long two-toned ensemble in orange and white and carrying a miniature of the other attendants' bouquets. Her dress had a white voile skirt and printed bodice with a cummerbund at the waist. She also wore a white picture hat to match the adults.

TONY AIARDO of Mount Prospect was Brian's best man. Bob Bychowski, Elgin, and Ken Holan, brother of the groom, ushered.

The couple's other grandparents attending the wedding festivities were Mrs. Stella Mika of Bensenville and Mr. and Mrs. Kamil Holan of Cicero.

After a short honeymoon at the Abbey at Lake Geneva, the newlyweds are living in a Mount Prospect apartment. Susan works for Hobart/McIntosh Paper Co. in Elk Grove, and Brian is a carpenter in Mount Prospect.

He attended Forest View High School; she went to Ridgwood High, Norridge.

They met on a blind date

A blind date at Purdue University started a romance that culminated in marriage for Linda Gausman of Mount Prospect and Mark Ridenour of Evansville, Ind.

Linda's close friend, Sally Katz of Westchester, who arranged the date, was maid of honor for their July 14 wedding in Church of the Master, Des Plaines.

"The bride and groom are both graduates of Purdue, Linda earning a degree in biology and Mark an electrical engineering degree and a master's in industrial administration.

Linda attended Wheeling High School before going to the university. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. Gausman of 1403 Cedar Lane, and her husband is the son of Mrs. Dolores Ridenour and the late Mr. Ridenour.

THEIR NUPTIALS took place at one o'clock, with a reception immediately following at the Wheeling Holiday Inn.

For her wedding day Linda chose a white organza Empire gown overlaid with a peau d'ange lace bodice. It featured a high neck, long puffed sleeves with lace cuffs and a sprinkling of the lace motif on the A-line skirt. A touch of color was added, to match the pastel theme, in a lavender ribbon encircling the waist.

Completing the bridal ensemble was a short bouffant veiling secured by a lace and ribbon bonnet. Linda's bouquet was a nosegay of white carnations, pink roses and orchid daisies, complementing the attendants' attire. The maid of honor appeared in a pink print gown with a wide pink satin insert at the waistline. She wore a pink picture hat and carried a nosegay of pink daisies and baby's breath.

TWO BRIDESMAIDS, attired exactly as the maid of honor but in orchid print gowns with orchid picture hats and orchid bouquets, were also in the wedding party. They are Laurie Gausman, the bride's sister, and Winnie Miller of Oxford, Ohio.

Coming down the aisle before the bride was 7-year-old Lisa Ridenour, the groom's sister, as flower girl. Lisa wore a long dress, two-toned with a white lace bodice and pink skirt. Her nosegay was of pink daisies, white carnations and baby's breath.

Lee Ridenour, brother of the groom, was his best man. The groomsmen were Ronald Mertens of Indianapolis, Mark's uncle, and Jeff Clair of Buffalo Grove.

Linda and Mark honeymooned for a week in Daytona Beach, Fla., and will soon leave for Mountain View, Calif., to make their home. Mark works there for Hewlett-Packard.

Lawrence graduates wed

Mr. and Mrs. William Ash

The month of June caused great changes in the lives of Julieann Norman of Elk Grove Village and William R. Ash of La Crosse, Wis.

First, they earned degrees in biology from Lawrence University at Appleton, Wis., and by the end of the month, on June 30, they were married in Queen of the Rosary Church, Elk Grove. Following a two-week honeymoon in Canada they are establishing a residence in Minneapolis.

Julieann, daughter of the Keith E. Normans of 529 Middlebury Lane, is a graduate of Elk Grove High School.

SHE CHOSE three attendants for the one o'clock nuptials, Deb Thulin of Bloomington, Ill., as maid of honor and the couple's sisters, Lynn Norman and Elizabeth Ash, as bridesmaids.

Richard Anderson Jr. of Durand, Mich., was best man, while brothers of the pair, Michael Norman and Jay Ash, seated the wedding guests.

The groom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. James Ash of La Crosse.

The bride wore a white chiffon and lace gown as she came up the church aisle. It was styled with a stand-up ruffled neckline, a lace yoke and bishop sleeves topped with lace. The flared skirt extended into a chapel train.

OVER HER gown Julieann wore a fingertip veil secured by a tiara of chiffon and lace. She carried white carnations, roses and baby's breath in a cascade arrangement.

Her attendants were dressed in bright blue chiffon with scoop neck and long sleeves. The waist was accented by lace to match the bride's gown. The girls' bouquets were nosegays of white carnations and miniature red roses.

After the ceremony the bride and groom greeted 50 guests at a dinner reception at Zappone's Brandywine in Elk Grove.

In-law note

For some Indian braves there was no mother-in-law problem — just a solution.

The early Cheyenne bridegroom, according to Encyclopaedia Britannica, co-operated with his father-in-law but was required to avoid all contact with his mother-in-law. (UPI)

Hard up for space? Get your kids a pocket pet

If space is a problem at your place, what do you say to the kids yammering for a pet?

Simple. You reach for a pocket pet. These are a pocketful of fun.

Pocket pets are members of the rodent family? But hold on. It's not as bad as it sounds. What the rodent pocket pets have going for them: Kids love 'em. Such pets are fun to play with, fun to feed and fun to watch. Ask the boy or girl on the block who owns one.

The pocket pet mouse actually is kept in a cage most of the time. He amuses for hours, whirling on an exercise wheel or scampering about the cage. After generations of domestic breeding, the mice now come in 70 different color varieties. There even are waiting mice. This strain has a hereditary quirk which prompts them to run circles on their hind legs, when they do it looks as though they are dancing. Pet mice, once tamed, enjoy being held. The average life-span of a mouse: Two years.

OTHER POCKET PET information:

—Hamsters. This mini-pet looks like a stub-tailed teddy bear with the mumps. He sits up to eat, using front paws to stuff extra into his large cheek pouch. Hamsters can be temperamental and zip. They are best for older children who understand how to handle them, says Patricia O'Keefe, of the Pet Food Institute. Hamsters live about three years.

—Gerbils. Pronounced jurbils, these creatures made the pet scene in 1965. They resemble hamsters but have a long tufted tail and sturdy hind legs. They are said to be very curious and quite sociable critters. They can be trained to accept food from the hand and nestle in a pocket for hours. Miss O'Keefe says they seldom nip unless abused or frightened. Their life span is three to four years.

—GUINEA PIG. Affectionate and docile, the guinea pig is a good pet for small children. It can withstand a good bit of cuddling. This four-legged pet of pint-sized proportions is not from Guinea and neither is it a dwarf pig. He looks like a cross between a large mouse and a short-eared rabbit. He's related to porcupines. Guinea pigs, according to Miss O'Keefe, grow to be about 10 inches long and hit the scales at two-and-one-half pounds. They fit only in a large pocket. However, they will snuggle on a shoulder and hold tight. It is not unusual for a guinea pig to learn to recognize his master's voice and greet him with a noisy whistle. He also whistles when he thinks it's time to eat. These pocket pets live about five years, if well cared for.

"Since pocket pets are small, two are as easy to keep as one and twice as much fun," Miss O'Keefe said. "Don't, however, get a male and a female unless you're prepared to cope with more ... many more."

Watch the fishie?

Children who stare into fish tanks for a long time may be damaging their eyes, according to Dr. Alden Haffner, consultant to the Society for Visual Care and director of the Optometric Center of New York.

Haffner warned that youngsters should not get too close to fish tanks which have ultraviolet fluorescent lamps. The lamps emit rays which can be harmful to the tissues of the eyes after prolonged exposure. (UPI)

Afghanistan needs him

American serves MEDICO

by GAY PAULEY

In the beginning it was the spirit of adventure that led Dr. Alan W. Zeller and his family into going to Afghanistan for MEDICO.

"I wanted my kids to know there was a world beyond Boston," said the surgeon who until 1969 was in private practice in Damariscotta, Maine.

But once in Afghanistan, the Zellers found how much the nation needed to train doctors, nurses and technicians in modern medical practices. So, when the first two years for which they'd signed up ended, they took a family vote and stayed for another two.

Then when the decision had to be made whether to re-settle in the United States or continue another two years in Afghanistan, the family vote was unanimous — back to the central Asian country.

Currently on a brief home leave, Dr. Zeller, his wife, Barbara, a medical secretary, and their youngest of five children, George, 2, talked of the work being done in a nation with shortages of medical personnel and with poverty and disease a way of life.

"MOST AFGHANISTANI are born, live and die without even seeing a doctor," said Zeller.

"My own idea is that this is what America should be doing," he said of the program he directs.

Zeller, 47, is team captain in Afghanistan for MEDICO, a service of CARE. MEDICO conducts medical programs in developing countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America, helping to treat some 500,000 patients a year, while also training local staffs to heal in the years ahead.

Zeller's headquarters are in the Avicenna Hospital in Kabul, the capital. There, he said, the idea is to further the training of students graduating from medical school and to encourage them to practice in their homeland.

"Most would leave to practice in other countries and just not return," he said.

The surgeon said that working with the government's Ministry of Health, medical school graduates may enroll in a five-year program for surgeons, three for internal medicine, and two for anesthesia. The program also trains nurses and paramedics.

ALL ARE OBLIGED to practice in their homeland at least part of the time spent in advanced training. The idea, said Dr. Zeller, is to get medical aid into the provinces and establish in effect a network with Kabul the hub and eventually training also at regional centers.

The doctor said that Afghanistan, with a population of about 17 million, has one doctor to each 21,360 persons. The United States has one for every 597.

He said the diseases which now worry the United States little are the killers in Afghanistan — typhoid, cholera, malaria and tuberculosis. TB perhaps is the No. 1 killer because "the disease is a socio-economic one . . . it goes along with being poor."

"Sanitation is a major problem," said Zeller. "Statistics are hard to come by, but unsafe water probably is the biggest cause of infant mortality."

MRS. ZELLER, a pretty blonde with a sunken nose, said they boil all water for drinking and household needs.

Luckily, the Agency for International Development (AID) has sunk a deep well so the Zellers draw from it. There's even a swimming pool for the American colony (AID and embassy personnel).

There's an American International School also for secondary education. George, his brother Robert, 15, and Alan Jr., 16, will re-enroll in the fall. But the two older children, Frank, nearly 19, and Sara, 17, will attend U.S. colleges.

Dr. Zeller said he certainly could make more money with a U.S. practice than with MEDICO, which pays a monthly salary of around $500 with allowances for living and travel expenses.

"But there in Afghanistan," he said, "you're practicing medicine as you rarely can practice it here. People come to you when they're really (he emphasized the word) sick. I once removed a 160-pound benign tumor from a woman who weighed only 98 pounds. When my colleagues back here question that, I just bring out slides of the operation."

(United Press International)

Dear Dorothy: Your column would be even more valuable if when suggesting mixtures to be used, you included proportions. Mrs. Campbell suggested Brewer's yeast for cats, but what amounts should be used per day? It also mentioned this product as a prime source of both B-complex vitamins and protein. Other than in baking, how can it be used in cooking and how much can be used? —Mrs. Joan Boswell Brewer's yeast is NOT used in baking. It is used in brewing, in medicine or as a dietary supplement. It's a hot item in health food stores and many who swear by the health foods use it in the popular food drink, tiger's milk. Mrs. Campbell did not specify how much of the yeast she fed her cats, but I'm sure your vet can supply this answer for you.

Tip to brides: If the pasta you are cooking is going to be used in a combination dish that will require more cooking, cook the pasta two thirds of the normal cooking time. Sometimes I cut this down even more as when cooking ravioli and I don't want the cheese to fall out. With the extra cooking, the pasta will be done.

Dear Dorothy: For years I had an embarrassing halitosis problem. Constant brushing and frequent trips to the dentist were no help. Out of toothpaste one day, I reached for the baking soda. My bad breath disappeared completely! I find it a great mouthwash, too. As for indigestion, it's the only thing that has ever helped me, and as soon as my present deodorant is gone, I'm going to follow one of your reader's tips and try it for that, too. —M. M.

Regular readers will understand why I plead the Fifth Amendment on this one.

(Mrs. Ritz welcomes questions and hints. If a personal reply is required, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Write to her in care of Suburban Living, Paddock Publications, Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60006.)

Used books needed for sale

When it's too hot for outdoor activities this summer, why not stay indoors and clean out closets and shelves? Especially book shelves.

That is the suggestion of Arlington Heights Branch of the American Association of University Women, which is seeking used books, paperbacks and records for its fall sale.

The group requests all types of books — fiction and nonfiction, children's tales, National Geographic, records, posters and prints.

ARRANGEMENTS CAN be made to pick up any and all donations in the northwest suburbs. The number to call in the Palatine-Barrington area is 358-2211; in the Arlington Heights area, 392-3682; and in Mount Prospect-Des Plaines, 627-5809.

The sale will take place this year on Nov. 2, 3 and 4 at Randhurst Shopping Center.

In past years the AAUW has collected several tons of books for the annual fundraiser, proceeds of which go to its Educational Fellowship Foundation. This program provides grants for women to finance their education at the doctoral and post-doctoral levels.

New Legion Auxiliary unit names Janett Blanchfield president

Mrs. Janett Blanchfield of Wheeling is the new president. She is the mother of Michael R. Blanchfield, Vietnam veteran and Medal of Honor winner for whom the Legion Post is named.

OTHER OFFICERS of the auxiliary are Helen Sackett, vice president; Elaine Larson, secretary; Linda Viska, treasurer; Dolores Wojcik, historian; Jackie Sackett, chaplain; and Betty Cramer, sergeant at arms.

The group held its first business session Tuesday, July 17, but will now meet regularly the second Tuesday of each month.

Overeaters unite to stop indulging

Overeaters Anonymous, "O.A.," is an organization of compulsive overeaters who have banded together to meet frequently and help one another stop indulging.

Similar to Alcoholics Anonymous, it is non-profit and has chapters all over the United States.

A local group meets Monday evenings at 7:30 in the Dunton Room of Arlington Heights Memorial Library, corner of Euclid and Dunton.

Individuals desiring further information can contact P.O. Box 24, Arlington Heights, or call Carole at 827-8871 ext. 222 days or 255-3733 evenings.

Support best help parents can give to children, says educator

NEW YORK — Memo to parents:

Dr. Helen D. Wise, president of the National Education Association (NEA), was asked how you can help your children succeed in school. She answered:

"The most important thing is that parents are supportive of children in school. That means, it seems to me, listening to their concerns.

"We have gone through the school of thought that the teacher is always right. That isn't necessarily so. That doesn't mean that we assume that the child is always right. But I think we learn to support youngsters by listening to them and if there are problems of getting to the teachers (teachers have sometimes as many as 150 or 200 children they teach in a day), it is up to the parents to communicate with the children and with the teacher so that they can help.

"I don't think it means elaborate home circumstances. I think it means being supportive and being helpful."

ARE THE SCHOOLS doing their fair share to prepare children for life? To that question, Dr. Wise, of State College, Pa., replied:

"I think in the long run schools are doing the very best job they can to provide a realistic, relevant curriculum for children. I have been teaching now for 25 years and I remember that one of the things that we were always taught to do was not to teach just facts, but to help children question and to wonder, to learn to use their minds so they could continually learn.

"I think we have to realize that, considering the great body of knowledge we have now, children don't go to school just to get those facts and that body of knowledge.

"Instead they are going to school so that they can learn how to keep on learning.

"And I think we are doing a good job of preparing children for life, where we have the adequate schools, facilities and the staff to do it."

The Lighter Side

by Dick West

WASHINGTON — Although you hear more about meat and milk, one of the leaders in this year's national price-raising contest is wood.

Evidence of this can be found in the fact that you no longer hear anyone say "Don't take any wooden nickels." The reason being that coins of that composition are now worth more than the real thing.

In a recent Senate speech, Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., noted that prices of some grades of lumber had risen more than 100 per cent in six months.

He said the increase had added at least $1,200 to the average home-building cost and was driving the average person out of the housing market.

TRUE ENOUGH. But if you already own a house, the inflationary impact has a different character.

For then inflation enables you to live in a more expensive neighborhood without actually moving.

Either way, wood clearly belongs on the list of materials — gasoline, beef, etc. — that should be used with restraint.

Which calls for yet another series of tips to consumers on how to practice conservation. May I be of service in that regard?

• Recycling toothpicks: Millions of board feet of lumber are wasted every year by people who insist on using a fresh toothpick after each meal.

Some are even so prodigal as to use only one end of a toothpick and then throw it away.

FOR CONSERVATION purposes, have each member of the family select his own personal toothpick and put his initials on it for identification. Or, if it's a small family, each can choose a different colored toothpick.

After a meal, the toothpicks should be collected and washed along with silverware, then returned to the table.

When both ends of the toothpick become frayed, it can easily be reshaped with a pen knife or a piece of sandpaper. With proper care, a toothpick can be used clear down to the nub.

• Chopstick substitutes: Using wooden chopsticks while eating Chinese food is another wasteful practice. Essentially the same results can be achieved through adroit use of the fingers.

Bend the thumb, ring finger and pinky into the palm, leaving the middle and index fingers extended. Insert those two fingers into the moo goo gai pan, or whatever dish you're having, and close together until particles of food have been secured between them. Lift hand to mouth, separating fingers to release food.

With a little practice you will find that most of the food lands on your necktie, just as with real chopsticks.

Nixon's cozy deal with the oil producers

by STEWART HENSLEY

WASHINGTON — President Nixon and the Shah of Iran, in their talks here this week, have devoted much attention to two closely related subjects — oil production and the security of the Persian Gulf, which Nixon described as the "key central area" of the Middle East.

The United States, faced with an energy crisis and thereby some major oil-producing countries to withhold supplies because of Washington's pro-Israel policy, has undertaken strenuous efforts lately to improve its relationship with some of the friendly Gulf nations.

Now Nixon is trying to broaden relations with Iran to include Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Northern Yemen and some small Arab enclaves given independence by Britain two years ago.

The Shah and Nixon are understood to have discussed in some detail Soviet intentions in the area.

THE IRANIAN ruler told the President of his continuing suspicion that the Soviet Union and India were in collusion to inspire the rebellious outbursts in Western Pakistan. The Shah's suspicions of the Soviet Union appear to have been increased by last week's coup in Afghanistan.

THE UNITED STATES does not believe that Russia is seeking any direct confrontation with the Americans in the Gulf, only trying to increase its influence there.

Nixon made it clear to the Shah that he will continue to have access to sophisticated U.S. military equipment, including the F14 Tomcat fighter plane now reaching the production stage for the U.S. Navy.

Nixon told the Shah that the United States was supplying Saudi Arabia with a naval force of small ships and was also selling that country F5 Freedom Fighter aircraft.

AS FOR KUWAIT, the United States is arranging a large sale of F8 Navy Crusader aircraft as well as equipment for ground forces and an air defense system.

The Shah urged Nixon to accelerate the program under which American oil companies have promised to give the producing nations in the area a greater share in the oil distribution system at all levels. This would provide Iran and other oil-rich countries a greater share of the proceeds of their resources. It also would require these countries to make investments in the United States which would "soo up" the vast surplus of dollars they have which contribute vastly to the problem facing American currency in world markets at present.

Bob Poyner and Cliff Benson will be calling the squares tomorrow night for the Bucks and Does, when they meet at the Rolling Meadows Sports Complex, 3900 Owl Dr., Rolling Meadows, for another evening of fun in square dancing.

All area dancers are invited. Dancing begins at 8 p.m. Lee Simpson and Shirley Konluk will be cueing the rounds throughout the evening in the air-conditioned hall.

Bucks and Does Square Dance Club is sponsoring a weekend of dancing, workshops and parties at the beautiful Illinois Beach Lodge in Zion. Club caller, Paul "Foggy" Thompson, along with the well-known, Beryl Main will be calling squares. Cueing the rounds will be Jerry and Dot Daniels.

This special "Tip and Nip Holiday" is scheduled for the 1st weekend in March and registrations with a $25 deposit are being taken now by Bucks and Does treasurers, Lloyd and Charlene Jacobson. More information can be obtained by calling them at 438-6913.

HAPPY TWIRLERS

Happy Twirlers dance every Thursday night in the air-conditioned hall of the Des Plaines Elks Club, 495 Lee St. The intermediate (plus) square dancing from 8:30 to 10:30 p.m. is interrupted for a short "workshop" session about 9:30 p.m. Recent "easy square dance rounds" are being reviewed from 8 to 8:30 p.m. Char-Lee Welters are the callers and round dance teachers.

Twenty more square dancers will soon be wearing Happy Twirler badges. Since Jan. 1, 1973, Char-Lee's group of Dancers & Contributors Dancers have been joined by more than 40 new members. These people "know" that Happy Twirlers do more than "just dance." During this period, they have already contributed more than $2,500 to three area churches and other "worthy projects." They are hopeful of interesting more churches in their D. & C. Plan. For more information call 824-1464.

Episcopal church a Christian 'bridge'

by LOUIS CASSELS

Episcopalians sometime speak of their church as "the bridge church" between Protestant and Roman Catholic Christianity.

It is an apt description, even in relatively literal terms. And there is a good deal of human traffic over this "bridge."

A Catholic who leaves his church is likely to become an Episcopalian — if he retains any formal Christian allegiance at all.

A Protestant who becomes a convert to Catholicism very often comes from — or at least, by way of — the Episcopal fold.

THE REASONS for this back-and-forth movement are not hard to discern. A former Catholic feels at home in an Episcopal church because its worship services are strikingly similar to those he knew as a Catholic. A Protestant with Catholic leanings is attracted to Episcopalianism because he finds there both the high degree of personal freedom he has known as a Protestant and the strong attachment to historic doctrines and sacraments which he associates with Catholicism.

The "bridge" role of the Episcopal Church — which has made it a vital force in the current ecumenical movement — is a direct result of the circumstances of the English Reformation.

Unlike the Calvinist and Lutheran churches of the European continent, the Church of England never sought to make a clean and total break with the Catholic religion when, under King Henry VIII and Queen Elizabeth I, it repudiated the authority of the Roman Pope.

HENRY'S IMMEDIATE purpose was to declare himself head of the English church in order to legitimize his own divorce. His deeper motive was to stop the Pope from playing politics in international affairs — or at least, from playing on the side of Spain. Henry's goals, in short, were political rather than religious, and to the end of his life he resisted any "protestantizing" of worship or doctrine in the Church of England.

His daughter Elizabeth, after inher-iting the throne, was somewhat more receptive to Reformation ideas. But even in her reign, the Vatican found the English Church sufficiently "Catholic" to refrain for 12 years from excommunicating its Queen and clergy.

After Pope Pius V finally published a bill of excommunication in 1570, Elizabeth abandoned any thought of reconciliation with Rome, and the Church of England came increasingly under the influence of Protestant doctrines which were emanating from Martin Luther's Germany and John Calvin's Geneva. The famous "Thirty-nine Articles of Religion" adopted during Elizabeth's reign as the official yardstick of orthodoxy in the English church, are distinctly Protestant in orientation. They explicitly affirm the two key doctrines of Protestantism: that scripture teaching is a sufficient source of Christian teaching without any need for paper interpretation or churchly tradition and that men are "justified" i.e., saved purely by faith in the mercy of God.

PERHAPS THE greatest factor in giving Anglican Christianity a distinctive character was the Book of Common Prayer, a handbook for corporate worship services prepared in the 16th Century by the great Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Cranmer. Cranmer cast aside medieval accretions to the ancient services of the Church, translated them into English, and added some magnificent new prayers of his own composition.

The result has remained for more than 400 years the most cherished possession of the Church of England and all of its daughter churches throughout the world, including Episcopal Church in the United States.

Indeed, the Book of Common Prayer obviously has been admired widely outside the Anglican family, for its influence, and even its very words, can be found in the new English Masses of the Catholic Church and in the latest liturgies of many Protestant bodies.

THE ANGLICAN Communion today is a loose federation of 18 self governing national churches which have a common heritage in the English Reformation. Their greatest bond is that all use the Book of Common Prayer. With some 40 million members worldwide, it is the third largest family of Reformation churches. In the United States, the Episcopal Church has about 3.5 million members.

Its impact on American history has been greater than many larger religious bodies, partly because it was first on the scene. Anglicanism came to America with the earliest English settlers. The first Anglican church was established at Jamestown, Va., in 1607 by a clergyman who accompanied Capt. John Smith's colonists.

Before the American Revolution, Anglicanism was the established, tax supported, official religion of most of the Southern colonies. George Washington, James Madison, Alexander Hamilton, Patrick Henry and many other founding fathers were Anglicans.

During the Revolutionary War, Anglican churches lost many of their clergymen, who fled home to England. They also lost ground among ardent champions of independence, who viewed askance a church that prayed each Sunday for the welfare of the English king. By the end of the war, the Anglican Church, which had been America's largest religious body only five years earlier had become one of the smallest and weakest.

THE SLOW JOB of rebuilding got underway in 1783 when a group of Anglican clergymen met in Connecticut and elected the Rev. Samuel Seabury as the first bishop of an independent American church of Anglican heritage. It was named the Episcopal Church because it has an "episcopacy" — that is, bishops. Episkopos is the Greek word for bishop.

For many years following the Revolution, the Episcopal Church grew very slowly. In areas where it had once enjoyed "establishment" status, it had a hard time teaching its members to support the church by voluntary gifts.

And it failed, either through timidity or because of its natural orientation to the Eastern seaboard, to move west with the advancing American frontier, as the Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians were doing.

WORST OF ALL, it acquired a reputation — which it still is trying to live down — as a church that catered to the carriage trade.

This reputation is wildly inappropriate today. No church in America has been more deeply committed than the Episcopal Church to achievement of economic opportunity and political power for non-white minorities, and the poor of all races. This ardent concern for the rights of the poor and oppressed has not been popular with some Episcopals of conservative bent. The Episcopal Church in recent years has suffered substantial losses of membership and financial support and has had to endure a good deal of acrimonious internal dissension because of its commitment to social justice.

However, it appears to be coming through this stormy passage more or less intact institutionally and stronger than ever spiritually.

In one sense, the Episcopal Church retains a special "class" appeal. But the class it attracts is not based on wealth or social position but rather on intellect. Episcopal congregations contain a far higher proportion of scientists, teachers, writers, artists and others of creative bent than almost any other type of Christian church. No longer the "rich man's church," the Episcopal Church in 1973 perhaps could lay claim to the title of "the thinking man's church."

Catholics form 'anti-defamation league'

by LOUIS CASSELS

Now there's a Catholic anti-defamation league.

It's not called that. Its official name is "The Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights."

But its Jesuit president, the Rev. Virgil Blum, frankly acknowledges that the new group is intended to do for Roman Catholics what the famed Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith has done for Jews in America.

"We have formed this organization to protect Catholics and their Church against defamation, to defend our religious and moral values against ridicule and abuse, and to defend the religious and civil rights of all Catholics," said Blum, a professor of political science at Marquette University.

Blum indicated a major goal will be to obtain a better Catholic "image" in the news media.

"Today the Catholic religion is defamed and ridiculed on radio and television and in the press," he said. He believes the news media have been particularly unfair to Catholics in coverage of controversies over abortion and aid to parochial schools.

LIKE ITS JEWISH counterpart, the Catholic league will be prepared to do battle in legal and political areas, as well as through "public education."

"We are committed to the defense of the right to life for the unborn," Blum said. "We will defend the right of doctors and nurses to refuse to perform abortions, and the right of hospitals to refuse to permit abortions and other actions that violate their conscience."

He said Catholic doctors, nurses and hospitals are being pressured by various government agencies to go along with what he describes as "the Supreme Court's ruling that women can kill their unborn babies."

He also deplored Supreme Court decisions striking down a variety of state plans for channeling public funds to parochial schools. The court, he said, seems determined to treat Catholic children as "second-class citizens." As a result, he said, Catholic parents are confronted with a choice between sending their children to public schools, "where they are taught amoral attitudes on sex," or "carrying the double burden of public school taxes and private school tuition."

"TODAY THERE is a surge of anti-Catholicism in America," Blum said. "The Catholic League is the only group organized to stem this tide."

What every organization needs to be effective is members and money. The Catholic League is conducting a nationwide drive for both. Blum said donations of any size are welcome.

An edible car?

Ford had a better idea, but war intervened

by EDWARD S. LECHTIZIN

DETROIT (UPI)—Today's rising food prices make the common soybean a highly prized agricultural product. Three decades ago, it almost became a prime ingredient in manufacturing automobiles.

The soybean car developed by Henry Ford made its debut in 1941 at a luncheon where everything was soy — soybean steaks, soy soup, salted soybeans, apple pie with a crust made of soy flour, soy milk, soy coffee, soybean ice cream and even soybean dressing.

To demonstrate the strength of his soybean car, Ford smashed a fire axe flat side into an apparently normal Ford coupe. The axe rebounded and out came a widely circulated picture showing the strength of the reinforced phenolic plastic from soybean derivatives.

IF THE Second World War had not intervened, Ford's dream of a plastic car body and "growing cars out of the ground" might have been realized. As it is, the average U.S. automobile has about 250 parts made out of plastic.

In the most highly populated areas of the world, soybeans are extensively used as a source of food and oil. The Commerce Department recently began tight control on exports of soybeans, a vital component of livestock feed.

YET DURING THE Great Depression, farmers had vast quantities of soybeans and few markets. Ford, the founder of the automobile company that bears his name, spent an estimated $4 million on soybean experiments which resulted in development of phenolformaldehyde for reinforced plastic.

In charge of that project was Robert A. Boyer, who says it took more than a decade before the experiments reached the stage where the actual car began to take shape.

Now 63 and a consultant to the Worthington Foods Division of Miles Laboratories, Boyer recently recalled some of his experiences in an interview with Forbes Magazine.

"Ford wanted to do something for farmers. They were among his best customers for the Model T and Model A," said Boyer. "So he built a laboratory for finding industrial uses for farm crops."

"We investigated all the common farm crops and it soon became clear the soybean had the most promise because of its high oil and protein content."

Boyer now holds patents on edible protein from soybeans which developed in the research for plastic material for autos. Plastics form into complex shapes much less expensively than metal.

TO PROVIDE THE needed soybeans for experiments, Ford purchased the property where much of the Ford Motor Co., headquarters in suburban Dearborn stands in order to be able to grow enough soybeans to produce a million cars a year with wood fiber-reinforced phenolic bodies.

Besides the $4 million in research, Ford spent an additional $10 million on mills and facilities and the company was a pioneer in using phenolics for door knobs, distributor heads and horn buttons, but the soybean car was just another item to be put aside when the United States entered the war after Pearl Harbor.

Ford died in 1946 before normal automobile production was resumed after the war, and the tubular frame-reinforced phenolic car never became a reality.

'Real world' comes alive for his class

HONOLULU (UPI)—An American Studies teacher who says he "can apply government to any aspect" of a student's life, has invented a unique program to take his kids out of the classroom and into the "real world" of high-pressure politics.

Joel Merchant, 29, makes politics and government come "alive" for his junior high school students at a private boarding school with an innovative program called "Hawaii State Legislature Assignment."

For the entire 60-day legislative session, his 80 eager students climb aboard a bus bearing the words Mid-Pacific Institute, and take a 10-minute ride to the $26 million state Capitol.

A native of North Smithfield, R.I., Merchant admits "relevance has always been a big issue for me." Speaking in complex sentences and articulate phrases, Merchant asked, "What else could I do? I can't put the kids on a plane for Washington, D.C., and the courts are so hard to get into."

The legislative branch at the state level, which Merchant describes as the "closest to the people," the logical choice.

Describing himself as a "theoretical academician," Merchant remains an advocate of old-fashioned book learning, coupled with "getting out of the classroom and into the real, outside world."

HIS STUDENTS at the small boarding school just outside Honolulu choose a partner, and must select a bill which most interests them. Some "start off absolutely bewildered," Merchant said, and say they don't have an interest. Merchant remains unimpressed by such arguments, saying, "I can apply government to any area of their lives." And he does, whether the bill concerns surfing or economics.

For the next 60 days, the students visit the state Capitol at least once a week, talking with staffers, visiting with legislators, interviewing lobbyists and following their bill "every inch of the way." They must discover who favors and opposes the bill, and why, and what effect its passage would have.

Between visits to the Capitol, the students read newspaper articles, view films, hold discussions and do intensive research into the legislative process.

"I attack them with government. They are ripe and vital . . . I simply rush at them with politics and what it means," Merchant said.

HE TALKS THEORY, but with an emphasis on reality. "Government, he said, "affects us day to day. The students begin to learn to look at politics and to find out what politicians do, and why they do it, who they are and the realities of participatory democracy. It's vital." Merchant speaks with sincerity and experience, some of it gained while registering black voters in 1965 in Selma, Ala.

His students, after initial fear, find out that "politicians are people who can be talked with. Most of them take it as an assignment, but many really get into it. It becomes a part of their lives."

He finds at the end of the session, "they turn in excellent papers," some of which ranged up to 50 pages . . . not a minor achievement for a 17-year-old. His juniors "discover what it's all about and some of them really get turned on by politics."

'Watergate' will be a college course

The University of Chicago will offer a course this fall on the "Constitutional Aspects of Watergate," the university announced Wednesday.

Philip B. Kurland, a university law professor, will teach the course. It is part of a new program designed to "help students apply their knowledge toward seeking practical solutions to public policy questions," the announcement said.

Number 1 in the state!

That's right! The Herald's eight-man staff of professional photographers teamed their efforts to earn The Herald the "Newspaper of the Year" award in a recent statewide competition sponsored by the Illinois Press Photographers Association.

The 15 winning photos entered by The Herald photography department were representative works of its entire staff. The competition they faced was tough — the knowledgeable judges reviewed entries from all the major Illinois newspapers, including the four Chicago dailies, and found The Herald's superior to all.

Top-notch photography . . . just one more reason to make the award-winning Herald your daily source for news.

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American declares

by TONI GINETTI

The Average American thinks the Watergate scandal "is a real mess," that President Nixon knows more about the affair than he's admitted publicly, and that the spiraling inflationary economy is forcing Americans "to do without."

And if he had known in November what he knows now, Mr. Average American would not have voted for Richard Nixon.

Those may not be the opinions of every American, but they are the opinions of Richard Johnson, the man from Rolling Meadows who computers picked last year as the typical, average middle class American.

Johnson drew national attention as the star of two public television broadcasts last year, one on the average American caught in the web of the inflation tangle, and the other a behind-the-scenes view of a presidential campaign through the eyes of the same average Joe.

HIS TV CAREER, made possible by the National Public Affairs Center for Television in Washington (NPACT), came to a peak in November when Johnson, after spending one week traveling and talking personally with Democratic Presidential candidate Sen. George

Richard Johnson

McGovern, revealed he voted for Richard Nixon.

Now, however, in the wake of months of headlines and revelations on the Watergate scandal, Johnson says he would not have voted for the President.

"If I knew as much about this Watergate thing then as I do now, I hate to say this but I probably would not have voted," Johnson said yesterday.

During the week Johnson spent barnstorming the country with McGovern, NPACT correspondent Robert MacNeil asked him several times whether the Watergate affair, which was only beginning to unfold at the time, was influencing

Johnson in his consideration of the candidates.

"I KEPT SAYING no, it wasn't impressing me, and after asking me four times, they finally gave up," Johnson said. "In hindsight, I didn't know that this thing was so deep. I didn't know that much about the Ellsberg break-in (the break-in of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office) but I'm becoming more convinced that Nixon knew about it."

"I believe that Nixon knows about Watergate. I think sooner or later Nixon will have to come out and defend himself. I think that without the tapes (the tapes of conversations in the White House that President Nixon has refused to turn over to Sen. Sam Ervin's committee investigating Watergate) they (the Senate committee) won't get to the bottom of it. But I don't think they will ever really get to the bottom of it. It's a real mess."

Johnson said that while he was on the McGovern campaign trail, the candidate did bring up the Watergate affair "but it didn't leave me with much of an impression because, as I said, I just didn't think it was as deep as it was."

"I give him (McGovern) credit because he did bring it up in several speeches, but I don't think he himself re-

Police department switchover in burglar alarms

Businesses won't pay more for new security system

by LYNN ASINOF

Wheeling businessmen will not pay extra money because of a switchover in the security alarm system in the Wheeling Police Department.

Wheeling Police Chief Peter Guttilla said yesterday he has received a large number of calls from businessmen who were worried about increased cost of their security. The chief said the calls were prompted by a letter from the firm that presently handles the village alarm board.

The police department is in the process of changing the operation of their burglar alarm control board from Certified Burglar Alarm Systems, Inc. to Burns Electronic Security Services, Inc.

Guttilla said that when Certified learned of the switch, they circulated a letter charging that Burns would cost the businessmen more while providing an inferior type of security.

THE LETTER, which was sent to most firms in Wheeling using burglar alarms, said the Burns system would require the businessmen to rip out their present systems and install a new system. The letter said this would cost between $115 and $175.

Moreover, the letter from Certified stated that the Burns system was inferior and would represent a "step backwards" in Wheeling security.

Guttilla said the charges by Certified were untrue, and were merely an attempt to keep their alarm board in the police department. "Certified is just trying to keep their security system in here," he said.

The new Burns system will not affect the burglar alarm systems of any business firms. The police department was merely changing the operation of the burglar alarm panel from one firm to another, Guttilla said.

BURNS WILL CHARGE the same $8 monthly hook-up rate as that of Certified. The new alarm panel will continue to allow hook-ups from alarm systems installed by other companies, according to Guttilla.

"There is no one taking any customers away from anyone," he said. "All we're doing is changing over the board in the radio room."

Guttilla decided to change to the Burns system because he felt it was a better security firm. "Burns is a big, worldwide organization," he said. "Certified is, from what I understand, a local burglar alarm system. My goal is to upgrade the security of the businesses that are hooked up to this system."

The chief said, however, that he had had no problems with the Certified system. The system was already installed when he became chief, and he merely felt that Burns could provide better security because of its size.

GUTTILLA SAID the new Burns system will save the village several hundred dollars a year because it will not charge the village for its own security hook-ups. "Certified was charging the village for our hook-ups," he said. "Burns will not charge us."

According to Guttilla, the installation and operation of the alarm panel is completely covered by the security firm that owns the board. "They do all the necessary work without it costing the village one penny," he said. "The owner of that panel comes in and repairs it. This is just a service that the police department is giving to private money-making organizations."

The new alarm panel installed by Burns will have room for more alarm hook-ups that will be needed as the village expands. He said there are now about 70 businesses using the panel.

The chief said it is not uncommon for police departments to periodically switch their security systems to a new firm. He said in some places such changes are made every few years.

Driveway rift drives Calfa from office

Wheeling builder Richard Calfa has resigned as president of the Wheeling Chamber of Commerce because of the controversy that developed over the driveway from his building at 1111 W. Dundee Rd.

Calfa said he still plans to install the driveway with an exit onto Redwood Trail despite the objections of residents in the area. He said, however, he resigned from the Chamber position to keep that organization from a bad name because of the driveway.

"As active as I am in the community, I did resign from the Chamber of Commerce," Calfa said. "I did not want to see any organization I was involved with getting a bad name because I was there."

THE CONTROVERSY over the driveway began several weeks ago when residents objected to traffic congestion on Redwood and Willow trails because of the exit from Calfa's office building. Residents brought the matter to the village board, asking that Calfa be made to put his driveway onto Dundee Road as was promised during zoning hearings for the property.

Although village board members said they would like to see Calfa live up to his testimony before the zoning board, the trustees said they could not force Calfa to put the driveway onto Dundee Road because building permits had been issued for the Redwood Trail exit.

When the board learned of the building permits, after several weeks of debate, Village Pres. Ted C. Scanlon appealed to Calfa "as a gentleman" to abandon the Redwood Trail exit.

"I took that a little to heart," Calfa said of the comment. "The people who were talking to me on the village board all understood my problem. When they say I was not a gentleman, I lived up to everything except those things that circumstances forced me to do."

CALFA SAID the installation of the driveway with the Redwood Trail exit will begin as soon as possible. He said the driveway will have a forced-right-hand turn with a "no-left-turn" sign posted, as requested by the village.

The builder said he could not move the driveway exit onto Dundee Road because the cost of such an exit would be prohibitive. "It isn't just putting down some tar," he said. "You have to put down a base."

Trustee to unveil liaison office plans

by LYNN ASINOF

Trustee Bill Hein will meet with interested Wheeling residents Monday to discuss plans for opening a liaison office providing him better communication with village residents.

Hein said the meeting, which will begin at 8 p.m. at the Heritage Park building, is designed to outline his plans for the office. "It's just a preliminary meeting," he said. "Anyone who would like to participate in this program is more than welcome to come."

According to Hein, the office will be staffed by volunteers and tie into a system of community representatives from each of the 12 village precincts. He said each precinct representative will keep in touch with him about various problems affecting residents in their area.

"A LOT of times I get phone calls from people on flooding problems, neighborhood type problems," he said. "Rather than doing it myself, which cannot be done, I'm going to assemble a staff of people to help me get it done."

Hein said by establishing area representatives in each precinct, residents will be able to talk to people who are already familiar with their problems. "It will make it as easy as possible to have people contact me," he said. "It will more or less be a liaison for me to expedite any type of problem that might come up."

The trustee will take names of interested residents at the meeting so they can sign up for various jobs in the new communications network. He said people can work from the telephone in his office, as area chairmen or as block representatives.

"At that meeting we are having a diagram showing how the function will work," he said. "Then we will start compiling a list of organizations for referral."

VOLUNTEERS STAFFING the phone will be able to use this list to refer residents to various governmental or social agencies to handle their problems. He said this referral service would not be limited to just village problems.

The trustee said he has already received a good response from residents about the project. "I was quite surprised," he said. "A lot of people have called, just all kinds of general people."

According to Hein, the program has nothing to do with the regular operation of Wheeling government. "But we will try to participate with them (village leaders) to expedite any problem."

The group may eventually expand its operation by taking on various projects that would benefit the community. "We'll be taking on projects such as recreational projects," he said. "We will be working very hard, trying to centralize the different activities."

Hein said all of the people involved with his program will be trained to handle various types of problems. He said such training would be particularly important for the people who will answer the phones.

Remember Lincoln County?

Should 6 area townships secede from Cook County? Idea's founders haven't given up yet

by MARCIA KRAMER

Remember Lincoln County? There may still come the day when residents of the Northwest suburbs live in Lincoln, rather than Cook, County. Republican diehards who hatched the idea two years ago of the six Northwest suburban townships seceding from Cook County and forming a new county haven't given up yet.

They still maintain that the new county would provide local control over local matters, especially the zoning of unincorporated property, and better tax benefits — suburban residents now pay taxes but receive few services from Cook County, they say. Not incidentally, Lincoln County would be controlled by Republicans, rather than the Cook County Democratic machine.

THE GOP's masterminding the new county proposal have come up with a new tactic that they hope will allow Barrington, Elk Grove, Hanover, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships to be known as Lincoln County.

The strategy is this: Present state law stipulates that a change in county boundaries must be approved in referendum by a majority of persons living in that county who vote in the general election. The feeling among Lincoln County advocates is that most Chicago voters wouldn't bother casting ballots on the Lincoln County issue, and thus would be recorded as "no" votes. Therefore, they hope to change the law so only a majority of those persons who vote on the specific issue would be needed.

Sounds simple? Not really. The chances of getting amendatory bills through the General Assembly are mixed, according to State Sen. David J. Regner, R-Mount Prospect, who says he will sponsor the legislation in the next session.

Even if the bills get through the legislature in one piece, Regner says, there's no telling what "maverick" Gov. Daniel Walker is liable to do.

"HE'S TOTALLY unpredictable," Regner said. "If he's mad enough at Mayor Daley at the time the bill is on his desk, there's a good chance he'll sign it."

And if the governor happens to be on good terms with the mayor at the time and doesn't want to jeopardize their tenuous relationship: "He'll kill it."

The Lincoln County question is clearly a politically partisan issue, backed by Republicans who are anxious to remove the heavily GOP suburbs from the Democratic control of Cook County. The Democrats don't especially want to give up the six revenue-producing townships.

So far, Lincoln County has been merely in the talking stage, and the concept, in fact, has been dormant for more than a year.

One of the biggest obstacles facing the new county advocates has been how to get the plan accepted in referendum by a majority of Cook County residents, both those in the six townships and the remainder of the county as well.

With the new strategy, they hope to bypass that hurdle.

"WE'RE GOING TO try to sneak it past the Chicago Democrats," said Wendell E. Jones, the key organizer of the campaign and Palatine village president. "If they know it as the 'Lincoln County bill,' they'll kill it."

Regner, however, a veteran of seven years in the legislature, doesn't hold out much hope for sneaking a bill of this magnitude past the eagle-eyed Democrats.

"A thing like this that would have a very direct effect on the political future of their party they would watch like a hawk," Regner observed. "There's no possibility of sneaking it by."

Regner said a Lincoln County bill could not pass in the House at this time, where, with the death of a Republican legislator, each party has 88 members.

The bill would, however, have a chance in the Senate, he said, where the GOP holds a slim 30-29 majority.

VOTING IN BOTH houses will be along party lines, Regner predicted, as "the mayor would instruct his men to be against it, lock, stock and barrel." Downstate Republicans probably would go along with their suburban counterparts in supporting the legislation, he said.

Not all area legislators look favorably upon Lincoln County. Democratic State Rep. Eugenia S. Chapman of Arlington Heights considers the Lincoln County plan simply a way to create Republican patronage jobs.

"They evidently feel the township jobs aren't enough," she said. "I see no other reason for the existence of Lincoln County than providing jobs for Republican loyalists."

She added cynically: "In these days of Watergate, I don't blame the Republicans for wanting to do something to bolster their power."

ALLAN LINDSTROM of Prospect Heights, surveys his home as it is ravaged by fire. Fire officials said the blaze caused $20,000 damage to the home at 903 Edward Dr. Lindstrom's 16-year-old son, John, who was in the house when the fire struck, had to be treated for smoke inhalation.

Fire guts Prospect Heights residence

by TOM VON MALDER

Gasoline fumes exploded yesterday at Allan Lindstrom home in Prospect Heights, touching off a fire that gutted the house.

Prospect Heights Fire Chief Don Gould told the Herald that it is believed gasoline leaking from a five-gallon can stored in the garage got into the Lindstrom home's sewer system and the fumes were touched off by a spark from a sump pump. Damage to the $50,000 home at 903 Edward Dr. is estimated at $20,000.

John Lindstrom, 16, was in the house when the fire broke out, and was taken to Northwest Community Hospital for treatment of smoke inhalation.

Lindstrom, who watched firemen put out the fire, told the Herald his wife had been in the driveway where the explosion occurred, shortly before noon. She was unhurt.

Most of the damage to the split-level home was restricted to the basement, although smoke damage was heavy throughout the house. The garage is a sunken one, bringing it level with the basement.

LINDSTROM SAID, "We'll fix it up,"

when asked what he would do in the wake of the fire. Looking over at the house, from which dense smoke was still pouring, he said the structure was still sound and the inside could be redone.

A while later, Lindstrom began carrying out items from the garage and inside of the house. The fire was officially out at 2 p.m., although most of the heavy smoke was gone by 1:30 p.m.

The Edward Drive area, like the majority of unincorporated Prospect Heights, is without fire hydrants. Thus, backup tankers from Wheeling, Glenview Rural, Mount Prospect and Arlington Heights fire departments were called in. Cook County Police arrived at 1:07 p.m. and warned neighborhood children to move back.

NEIGHBORS OF the Lindstroms stood by and watched the efforts to put out the fire. Several brought out cold water and soft drinks for the firemen.

Shortly before 2 p.m., a second fire was reported in Prospect Heights. An Arlington Heights Fire Department truck, which had been standing by at the Prospect Heights station, put out a trash fire at an abandoned barn on Rand Road near Margaret Street.

Arlington Heights Fire Department Capt. Jack Bensen told the Herald the barn fire was "absolutely" set on purpose. He added the fire was easily put out.

There was no damage estimate available. The barn is considered worthless and reportedly was scheduled to be torn down.

Softball tournament play begins tonight

The first round of play in the Wheeling Park District men's 16-inch slow-pitch softball tournament begins at 7 tonight at Heritage Park, 222 S. Wolf Rd.

The top 16 teams in the Wheeling Park District League will participate in the double elimination tournament.

Games will be played each night next week with the final game scheduled for Aug. 4.

Correction

The Herald incorrectly reported yesterday that the Wheeling budget includes a 21 per cent increase in the size of the village staff. Village Mgr. George Passolt said yesterday the 21 per cent increase is in the cost for personnel rather than the size of the village staff. He said the actual increase in village employees is nine per cent.

Seat on Wheeling Park Board open

A seat on the Wheeling park board is available, following the resignation of Nizzi, president of the board.

Nizzi is leaving the village to assume a position in the Neenah, Wis. school system this fall.

Residents interested in serving as a park commissioner may apply by contacting Park Supt. Dave Phillips at the park district office, 222 S. Wolf Rd.

The park board will interview all applicants and vote to appoint the new commissioner.

The board must still decide whether to name the commissioner to serve until the next park board election in 1975 or to complete Nizzi's term that expires in 1977.

Johnson also has some opinions on the wallet-draining economic situation.

"I don't like these high prices. As of right now the business I'm in (Johnson works for the National Steel Service Center in Evanston), business has never been so good, but I hate to think what's going to happen when the roof caves in."

"As far as I'm concerned, I think the economy is about as high as it can get, but it's got to break," Johnson said. He said like most Americans he "doesn't know too much" about the Administration's Phase III and IV controls, adding "I don't know if he (Nixon) is swimming in all of this."

"I DO KNOW that I'm eating fewer and fewer meats," he said. "It's just ridiculous. I saw on television how farmers were killing chicks because it's just too expensive to raise them. When a situation gets to that point, it's bad news."

"I'll just do without," Johnson said of coping with the economy. "Inflation is here and it's a reality and if they try to call it anything else, it's poppycock as far as I'm concerned."

Like other Americans, he says the raises he gets aren't enough to keep up with rising prices. "I can't save anything. I'll be happy if I can stay healthy and my family can stay healthy."

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American declares

by TONI GINETTI

The Average American thinks the Watergate scandal "is a real mess," that President Nixon knows more about the affair than he's admitted publicly, and that the spiraling inflationary economy is forcing Americans "to do without."

And if he had known in November what he knows now, Mr. Average American would not have voted for Richard Nixon.

Those may not be the opinions of every American, but they are the opinions of Richard Johnson, the man from Rolling Meadows who computers picked last year as the typical, average middle class American.

Johnson drew national attention as the star of two public television broadcasts last year, one on the average American caught in the web of the inflation tangle, and the other a behind-the-scenes view of a presidential campaign through the eyes of the same average Joe.

HIS TV CAREER, made possible by the National Public Affairs Center for Television in Washington (NPACT), came to a peak in November when Johnson, after spending one week traveling and talking personally with Democratic Presidential candidate Sen. George

Richard Johnson

McGovern, revealed he voted for Richard Nixon.

Now, however, in the wake of months of headlines and revelations on the Watergate scandal, Johnson says he would not have voted for the President.

"If I knew as much about this Watergate thing then as I do now, I hate to say this but I probably would not have voted," Johnson said yesterday.

During the week Johnson spent barnstorming the country with McGovern, NPACT correspondent Robert MacNeil asked him several times whether the Watergate affair, which was only beginning to unfold at the time, was influencing

Johnson in his consideration of the candidates.

"I KEPT SAYING no, it wasn't impressing me, and after asking me four times, they finally gave up," Johnson said. "In hindsight, I didn't know that this thing was so deep. I didn't know that much about the Ellsberg break-in (the break-in of Dr. Daniels Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office) but I'm becoming more convinced that Nixon knew about it."

"I believe that Nixon knows about Watergate. I think sooner or later Nixon will have to come out and defend himself. I think that without the tapes (the tapes of conversations in the White House that President Nixon has refused to turn over to Sen. Sam Ervin's committee investigating Watergate) they (the Senate committee) won't get to the bottom of it. But I don't think they will ever really get to the bottom of it. It's a real mess."

Johnson said that while he was on the McGovern campaign trail, the candidate did bring up the Watergate affair "but it didn't leave me with much of an impression because, as I said, I just didn't think it was as deep as it was."

"I give him (McGovern) credit because he did bring it up in several speeches, but I don't think he himself re-

Buffalo Grove Days celebration features dining, dancing, picnic

by JOE FRANZ

A swim party, dinner dance, art fair, picnic, and fireworks display and of course a parade will highlight the 11th annual Buffalo Grove Days celebration Aug. 31-Sept. 3.

This year's festivities will once again take place in a Gay '90s setting.

The four day festival will start off Friday, Aug. 31 with a swim party and dance for teens at Willow Stream Pool on Farrington Drive. The party will run from 6:30-10:30 p.m.

Saturday, Sept. 1 has been set aside for the annual dinner dance for adults. At this time Village Pres. Gary Armstrong will present the Citizen's Commendation Award to the person chosen as the outstanding resident in Buffalo Grove for 1973.

ALTHOUGH NOT compulsory, those attending the dinner dance are urged to dress in Gay '90s attire. Those with costumes judged to be the best will be given prizes.

Cocktails will be served at 7 p.m., dinner at 8 p.m. and dancing from 9:30 p.m.

Tickets for the dinner dance which will be at the Ranch Mart Shopping Center, at Dundee and Buffalo Grove roads will be $5 per person. Tickets will go on sale Aug. 12 at locations throughout the village.

The annual Buffalo Grove Days' parade will begin Sunday, Sept. 2 at 1 p.m. Bob Bogart, co-chairman of this year's festivities said from 1,200 to 1,500 persons will participate in the parade. Numerous bands and floats from local organizations will participate. Awards will be given for the best marching bands and floats, Bogart said.

THE PARADE will begin at Arlington Heights Road and Bernard Drive and proceed down Bernard to Raupp Boulevard. Anyone interested in participating in the parade should call Alan Lanter at 537-3422.

Following the parade, residents can participate in a variety of events near the village hall. At that time awards will be given to the village's outstanding teenager and outstanding homemaker.

There will also be a motorcycle demonstration given by the Medinah Motor Corps. At 1 p.m. an art fair will open in front of the village hall.

A variety of games and rides along with food will be available to those attending. Sunday's activities will be brought to a close at 9 p.m. with a fireworks display sponsored by the Buffalo Grove Jaycees.

Monday, Sept. 3, the Buffalo Grove Recreation Association will sponsor a picnic near the village hall. There will be games for all ages along with a variety of food. Adults attending will be able to play bingo, Bogart said. He said in the next few weeks he and co-chairman Norm Katz will be finalizing plans for the four day festival. He emphasized that residents of neighboring communities are welcome to attend the events.

A mobile piece of American history

by JEANNETTE DE WYZE

The big red and yellow wagon visible from the street in back of the Louis DeCola home, 513 White Pine Rd., in Buffalo Grove, is more than just a fancy yard decoration.

The wagon is a buckboard, a vehicle which fills a significant place in American transportation history.

The DeColas bought the buckboard a few weeks ago and are working to restore it to something like its original condition. When asked to tell the story of the buckboard, Louis DeCola responds enthusiastically.

"Buckboards helped to settle his country. I'm shocked that more people don't know about them. I wonder where their history lessons are," he said.

ACCORDING TO DeCola, buckboards were used in the latter half of the 1800s. His particular model dates back to the 1880's or 1890's.

It derived its name from the fact that the interior section of the wagon stretches from one end of it to the other, thus producing a bucking effect for the riders. Bigger than surreys, which were used primarily for more stylish transportation, and smaller than the covered wagon, the buckboard was "the station wagon of the 19th century," DeCola said.

Buckboards were used mainly for transporting small loads of goods and were usually kept in barns or under cover when not in use.

The DeColas' buckboard would have cost around $250 when it was new.

"That was in the days when you could get a beef steak for around 20 cents, so it was really worth a lot of money. But it was something that every family had to have," he said.

A more sophisticated model, like the DeColas, which has springs built in to reduce the bucking effect, could cost a family an additional $12.

BUCKBOARDS WERE used by 20th century families for a while and then as peddler's wagons up to the 1940s. Residents of Amish settlements in Pennsylvania still use them, but the only other places buckboards can be seen today are in museums, amusement parks, and westerns. Or in the DeColas' backyard.

DeCola said he bought the buckboard because he always had an interest in antiques. "I appreciate old things. My wife and I are always going to museums to see things like this," he said.

The DeColas had already collected a few other antiques, but DeCola always was particularly interested in buckboards.

"It was funny, but a few weeks ago I was talking to the guys at work and they asked me what I was going to do about the gas shortage. I told them I'd get myself a buckboard."

"The very next day I was driving along Rohlfing Rd. in Palatine, when I spotted this place which had all of these wagons outside. Buckboards, and peddler's wagons and all sorts of things," he said.

WHEN HE STOPPED to inquire, DeCola found that the wagons were owned by a historian who had been collecting them, but who was willing to sell one of the buckboards.

Despite the fact that they had barely settled into their Buffalo Grove home after moving from Wheeling, the DeColas bought it without hesitation.

The buckboard is six feet wide and eight feet long. It is designed to seat two people up in front behind the single horse harness. Now the DeColas are working to repair and rejuvenate it.

DeCola said the wood is still in fairly good shape, although he did fumigate it after he bought it. He then oiled the wood with linseed oil, sealed it, and began the paint job, which is still in progress.

The buckboard looks almost as good as new now, the bright red body, flanked by four huge, yellow-spoked wheels. A few repairs remain, including replacing the two front wheels.

BECAUSE THE front wheels which are on the buckboard now are cracked and weak the DeColas turned down an invitation to ride in their buckboard in the Buffalo Grove Days parade this year. However, DeCola says he hopes to have the buckboard in shape for next year's parade, and he already knows where he can rent a pony to pull it.

In the meantime, he said he will be on the lookout for more buckboards.

"I definitely will buy more if I can find any that I could bring back to life. The problem is that so many of them around today are just too deteriorated," he said.

DeCola welcomes people to stop by and look at the buckboard in his backyard.

"I really felt bad when I told people I had bought a buckboard and nobody knew what it was. I think people should know what settled this country," he said.

KELLY AND CATHY DeCola, along with Peppi the poodle, get a taste of what 19th century travel was like in the family's recently-acquired buckboard. The DeCola's are now working to rejuvenate the 90-year-old buckboard — the station wagon of the 1880s.

Autopsy to determine cause of girl's death

An autopsy has been scheduled to determine the cause of death of Dawn Saloga, 14, who was discovered dead yesterday in her home at 643 Hawthorne Rd. A spokesman at the Cook County morgue said yesterday the cause is unknown and will not be determined until an autopsy is performed within the next few days. Foul play is not suspected. Buffalo Grove Police said the girl's body was discovered on the bathroom floor by her sister Jodi. Her sister called her father, Ernest, who then called the Buffalo Grove Fire Department. Miss Saloga was pronounced dead at the scene and transported to the morgue.

Remember Lincoln County?

Should 6 area townships secede from Cook County? Idea's founders haven't given up yet

by MARCIA KRAMER

Remember Lincoln County? There may still come the day when residents of the Northwest suburbs live in Lincoln, rather than Cook, County. Republican diehards who hatched the idea two years ago of the six Northwest suburban townships seceding from Cook County and forming a new county haven't given up yet.

They still maintain that the new county would provide local control over local matters, especially the zoning of unincorporated property, and better tax benefits — suburban residents now pay taxes but receive few services from Cook County, they say. Not incidentally, Lincoln County would be controlled by Republicans, rather than the Cook County Democratic machine.

THE GOP's masterminding the new county proposal have come up with a new tactic that they hope will allow Barrington, Elk Grove, Hanover, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships to be known as Lincoln County.

The strategy is this: Present state law stipulates that a change in county boundaries must be approved in referendum by a majority of persons living in that county who vote in the general election. The feeling among Lincoln County advocates is that most Chicago voters wouldn't bother casting ballots on the Lincoln County issue, and thus would be recorded as "no" votes. Therefore, they hope to change the law so only a majority of those persons who vote on the specific issue would be needed.

Sounds simple? Not really. The chances of getting amendatory bills through the General Assembly are mixed, according to State Sen. David J. Regner, R-Mount Prospect, who says he will sponsor the legislation in the next session.

Even if the bills got through the legislature in one piece, Regner says, there's no telling what "maverick" Gov. Daniel Walker is liable to do.

"HE'S TOTALLY unpredictable," Regner said. "If he's mad enough at Mayor Daley at the time the bill is on his desk, there's a good chance he'll sign it."

And if the governor happens to be on good terms with the mayor at the time and doesn't want to jeopardize their tenuous relationship: "He'll kill it."

The Lincoln County question is clearly a politically partisan issue, backed by Republicans who are anxious to remove the heavily GOP suburbs from the Democratic control of Cook County. The Democrats don't especially want to give up the six revenue-producing townships.

So far, Lincoln County has been merely in the talking stage, and the concept, in fact, has been dormant for more than a year.

One of the biggest obstacles facing the new county advocates has been how to get the plan accepted in referendum by a majority of Cook County residents, both those in the six townships and the remainder of the county as well.

With the new strategy, they hope to bypass that hurdle.

"WE'RE GOING TO try to sneak it past the Chicago Democrats," said Wendell E. Jones, the key organizer of the campaign and Palatine village president. "If they know it as the 'Lincoln County bill,' they'll kill it."

Regner, however, a veteran of seven years in the legislature, doesn't hold out much hope for sneaking a bill of this magnitude past the eagle-eyed Democrats.

"A thing like this that would have a very direct effect on the political future of their party they would watch like a hawk," Regner observed. "There's no possibility of sneaking it by."

Regner said a Lincoln County bill could not pass in the House at this time, where, with the death of a Republican legislator, each party has 88 members.

The bill would, however, have a chance in the Senate, he said, where the GOP holds a slim 30-29 majority.

VOTING IN BOTH houses will be along party lines, Regner predicted, as "the mayor would instruct his men to be against it, lock, stock and barrel." Downstate Republicans probably would go along with their suburban counterparts in supporting the legislation, he said.

Not all area legislators look favorably upon Lincoln County. Democratic State Rep. Eugenia S. Chapman of Arlington Heights considers the Lincoln County plan simply a way to create Republican patronage jobs.

"They evidently feel the township jobs aren't enough," she said. "I see no other reason for the existence of Lincoln County than providing jobs for Republican loyalists."

She added cynically: "In these days of Watergate, I don't blame the Republicans for wanting to do something to bolster their power."

Recruiters aim at quotas

Selling of the Army '73 a tough job

by BETTY LEE

The girl who walked up to the Army display stand was probably 16 years old. She had long brown hair pulled back over her ears, monogrammed earrings and was dressed impeccably.

She stopped, picked up a handful of brochures and began looking through them. But before she could read the first few lines, the Army recruiter was at her side. And for the next half hour she was learning everything from soup to nuts about the military and why she should join. This girl, perhaps, had no more intention of joining the Army than dropping out of high school, but she had stopped and she was a prospect.

That's the way it is these days in military recruiting. The new fiscal year began July 1 and quotas have to be met just like those of a salesman.

So the Army and other branches of service are pulling out all the stops in an effort to enlist men and women. The display stand at Woodfield Shopping Center in Schaumburg is an example.

THERE WERE two recruiters, a man and a woman, who stood alongside a portable movie screen and piles of brochures. This was their ammunition and men and women between the age of 18 and 21 were their targets. They were rustling just as in their jobs depended upon it and this may be the case.

The passive recruiters are no longer. They now are heading to schools, shopping centers, ball games or "wherever the people are" according to Lt. Col. Peter Clifford of the U.S. Army. "We have to make it convenient for the people and go where they go," he said.

With the beginning of a new recruiting year for all volunteer forces, the officers are scrambling with new methods to entice young men and women into their offices. Because there is no draft, the role of the recruiter has changed.

"It is a selling game," said Sgt. Wil-

center yesterday is one tactic to entice men to enlist in the Army.

liam Thomsen of the Marine Corps. "Five years ago a man might walk into the office and say, 'I want to join the Marines.' The recruiter would probably say, 'So what? So does everyone else.' But now, the recruiter will say, 'Sit right down and I'll tell you the whole story.'"

During the last fiscal year, the Army alone poured more than $26.7 million in advertising for active army inductees, according to Col. Gerald Childress, director of advertising and information for the U.S. Army at Ft. Sheridan.

CHILDRESS INDICATED that in 1973 $138 was spent in advertising per soldier, as compared to the $35 spent in 1970.

More ads, posters, commercials and recruiters are used today in hope of bringing the potential inductees to meet quotas set for active armed forces.

"Vietnam had a terrible effect on the Army," said Clifford, also stationed at Ft. Sheridan. "The Army had to act in an unnatural atmosphere, mostly political."

"It brought in undesirables and things like My Lai happened," he said. "But as Vietnam diminishes, people will remember the favorable and social importance. We've got to re-educate the people... we're not averse... we don't thrive on killing."

"The Vietnam war was an unpopular war," said Thomson. "A lot of people didn't want to go and they don't connect the service as a way to get ahead in education. The immediate connection is to go out and shoot people."

IN TALKING WITH potential inductees, the recruiters emphasize the opportunity and education, rather than service.

Combat and other regimented duties are still very much a part of the military, and the recruiter does not disguise or hide the less attractive aspects of duty, according to Clifford.

"But we're discovering, although no men like to say so, that there's a need to serve the country," he said. "I think they're beginning to enlist for the right reasons."

A handful of new incentives have been added to bolster the attractiveness of enlisting. For example, in January, there was an increase in base pay, thus more than doubling the amount to $307 a month.

"But we have to work harder and longer hours for the same amount of people," said Roger Johnson, a Navy recruiter working in Palatine. Johnson said they have enlisted five persons this month, the normal number. "The numbers are slowly (increasing) but surely," he said.

IN CHICAGO, the Army met 72 per cent of its recruiting objective, the Army met 85 per cent nationwide, according to Clifford. "It's too early to say how we're doing this year, since the fiscal year just started," he said. "But it'll work... it'll just take some time."

Air Force Recruiter Sgt. Robert Hill reported that quotas were met in his office at 800 Lee St. in Des Plaines.

"We never drafted, so the numbers won't change much," he said. "This area is harder, so it depends on the geographical location. Texas is a good state because it's a military-minded state. People are waiting at the doors there."

Fire guts Prospect Heights residence

by TOM VON MALDER

Gasoline fumes exploded yesterday at the Allan Lindstrom home in Prospect Heights, touching off a fire that gutted the house.

Prospect Heights Fire Chief Don Gould told the Herald that it is believed gasoline leaking from a five-gallon can stored in the garage got into the Lindstrom home's sewer system and the fumes were touched off by a spark from a sump pump. Damage to the $50,000 home at 903 Edward Dr. is estimated at $20,000.

John Lindstrom, 16, was in the house when the fire broke out, and was taken to Northwest Community Hospital for treatment of smoke inhalation.

Lindstrom, who watched firemen put out the fire, told the Herald his wife had been in the driveway where the explosion occurred, shortly before noon. She was unhurt.

Most of the damage to the split-level home was restricted to the basement, although smoke damage was heavy throughout the house. The garage is a sunken one, bringing it level with the basement.

LINDSTROM SAID, "We'll fix it up," when asked what he would do in the wake of the fire. Looking over at the house, from which dense smoke was still pouring, he said the structure was still sound and the inside could be redone.

A while later, Lindstrom began carrying out items from the garage and inside of the house. The fire was officially out at 2 p.m., although most of the heavy smoke was gone by 1:30 p.m.

The Edward Drive area, like the majority of unincorporated Prospect Heights, is without fire hydrants. Thus, backup tankers from Wheeling, Glenview, Rural, Mount Prospect and Arlington Heights fire departments were called in. Cook County Police arrived at 1:07 p.m. and warned neighborhood children to move back.

NEIGHBORS OF the Lindstroms stood by and watched the efforts to put out the fire. Several brought out cold water and soft drinks for the firemen.

Shortly before 2 p.m., a second fire was reported in Prospect Heights. An Arlington Heights Fire Department truck, which had been standing by at the Prospect Heights station, put out a trash fire at an abandoned barn on Rand Road near Margaret Street.

Arlington Heights Fire Department Capt. Jack Bensen told the Herald the barn fire was "absolutely" set on purpose. He added the fire was easily put out.

There was no damage estimate available. The barn is considered worthless and reportedly was scheduled to be torn down.

alized how deep this was," Johnson said. "AS FAR AS I'm concerned now, I think if I had known then what I know now, I would just not have voted. I don't know what it (Watergate) is all going to lead to."

Johnson also has some opinions on the wallet-draining economic situation.

"I don't like these high prices. As of right now the business I'm in (Johnson works for the National Steel Service Center in Evanston), business has never been so good, but I hate to think what's going to happen when the roof caves in."

"As far as I'm concerned, I think the economy is about as high as it can get, but it's got to break," Johnson said. He said like most Americans he "doesn't know too much" about the Administration's Phase III and IV controls, adding "I don't know if he (Nixon) is swimming in all of this."

"I DO KNOW that I'm eating fewer and fewer meats," he said. "It's just ridiculous. I saw on television how farmers were killing chicks because it's just too expensive to raise them. When a situation gets to that point, it's bad news."

"I'll just do without," Johnson said of coping with the economy. "Inflation is here and it's a reality and if they try to call it anything else, it's poppycock as far as I'm concerned."

Like other Americans, he says the raises he gets aren't enough to keep up with rising prices. "I can't save anything. I'll be happy if I can stay healthy and my family can stay healthy."

"I'm just a middle class guy," he adds of his battle with inflation. "That's the way it is for everyone."

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American declares

by TONI GINETTI

The Average American thinks the Watergate scandal "is a real mess," that President Nixon knows more about the affair than he's admitted publicly, and that the spiraling inflationary economy is forcing Americans "to do without."

And if he had known in November what he knows now, Mr. Average American would not have voted for Richard Nixon.

Those may not be the opinions of every American, but they are the opinions of Richard Johnson, the man from Rolling Meadows who computers picked last year as the typical, average middle class American.

Johnson drew national attention as the star of two public television broadcasts last year, one on the average American caught in the web of the inflation tangle, and the other a behind-the-scenes view of a presidential campaign through the eyes of the same average Joe.

HIS TV CAREER, made possible by the National Public Affairs Center for Television in Washington (NPACT), came to a peak in November when Johnson, after spending one week traveling and talking personally with Democratic Presidential candidate Sen. George

Richard Johnson

McGovern, revealed he voted for Richard Nixon.

Now, however, in the wake of months of headlines and revelations on the Watergate scandal, Johnson says he would not have voted for the President.

"If I knew as much about this Watergate thing then as I do now, I hate to say this but I probably would not have voted," Johnson said yesterday.

During the week Johnson spent barnstorming the country with McGovern, NPACT correspondent Robert MacNeil asked him several times whether the Watergate affair, which was only beginning to unfold at the time, was influencing

Johnson in his consideration of the candidates.

"I KEPT SAYING no, it wasn't impressing me, and after asking me four times, they finally gave up," Johnson said. "In hindsight, I didn't know that this thing was so deep. I didn't know that much about the Ellsberg break-in (the break-in of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office) but I'm becoming more convinced that Nixon knew about it."

"I believe that Nixon knows about Watergate. I think sooner or later Nixon will have to come out and defend himself. I think that without the tapes (the tapes of conversations in the White House that President Nixon has refused to turn over to Sen. Sam Ervin's committee investigating Watergate) they (the Senate committee) won't get to the bottom of it. But I don't think they will ever really get to the bottom of it. It's a real mess."

Johnson said that while he was on the McGovern campaign trail, the candidate did bring up the Watergate affair "but it didn't leave me with much of an impression because, as I said, I just didn't think it was as deep as it was."

"I give him (McGovern) credit because he did bring it up in several speeches, but I don't think he himself re-

No weed problem? All ya gotta do is look around...

by DIANE STEFANOS

Although Elk Grove Village police and health department officials will contend that there is no weed problem this summer, a multitude of densely covered vacant lots throughout the village can only prove otherwise.

The health department recently sent out notices to owners of vacant residential and industrial lots where weed growth had exceeded the village's eight inch limit. After issuing the warnings, the health department will survey the lots again within the week to see if measures have been taken by the owners to cut down weeds.

A village weed ordinance provides a fine of no less than $1 and no more than $10 for property owners who fail to abide by the limit.

"We want to make sure that people keep their weeds cut because they can be eyesores, potential fire hazards and unhealthy for people with allergies," said

Barbara Watson, sanitarian for the village. "They also help to breed mosquitos and other insects. So once a summer we contact property owners who are negligent of the ordinance."

HAVING ALREADY received good cooperation from residential and property owners in complying with the weed ordinance, the only real trouble the health department has had so far involves tracking down owners of vacant lots. Many of these owners live in other areas of the country.

"Once most property owners have been informed of their negligence they usually keep up their weed cutting pretty good," Mrs. Watson said.

The weed problem and control in the village isn't as bad this year as it might have been in the past, mainly because the village has been developing and fewer vacant lots are left to host extensive weed growth. The vacant lots that do re-

50% decline in teaching jobs seen here this fall

Fifty per cent fewer new teachers will begin teaching in Elk Grove Twp. School Dist. 59 this fall than in years past.

The process of teacher selection hasn't changed, nor has the number of classroom teachers (640) employed by the district. Assistant Supt. Albeon Waitman attributes the decrease in need for new teachers to the economy of the times.

"Jobs are scarce and this cuts the mobility of teachers down. They are not as eager to leave a secure teaching position because they might not find another. At least that's what I believe," Waitman said.

Fifty new teachers were hired by the district for the fall, compared to 80 new teachers hired last year and about 100 new teachers that have been hired in years prior to 1972.

ALL OF the teachers new to the district have graduated with bachelor degrees in education, mostly from Illinois universities. A minority of the new teachers have graduated from private universities or those outside the state, or with degrees beyond a bachelor's.

"It's mainly because most people choose to attend state universities and most of our applicants are from Illinois originally," Waitman said.

Even with many new teaching techniques and practices being used in area elementary and junior high schools, the criteria used to evaluate teaching candi-

Busse Woods control basin bids to be taken Aug. 10

Bids for clearing and excavation of the Busse Woods flood control basin will be taken Aug. 10 in Springfield, Gov. Daniel Walker announced yesterday.

The basin will be a 589-acre reservoir, capable of swelling to 1,300 acres during times of flooding from Salt Creek. Located in the Ned Brown Forest Preserve in unincorporated Elk Grove Township, the basin will hold 4,210 acre-feet of water.

Excavation, relocation and construction costs of the basin are expected to total about $5.5 million, which the state will provide now, in anticipation of future reimbursement by the federal government.

The Busse Woods basin is part of a $26.5 million Upper Salt Creek Watershed flood control program, which has been proposed since the mid-1960's. The program is designed to relieve flooding in the 33,280-acre flood plain of Salt Creek by up to 90 per cent.

The entire program calls for a series of six flood control structures along the creek, the largest of which is the Busse Woods reservoir.

Henrici seeks more funds for fire prevention bureau

by FRED GACA

Charles Henrici is about three years behind in his efforts to put the Elk Grove Village Fire Department out of business, and he loses more time every day.

Henrici is a lieutenant in the fire department and also heads the fire prevention bureau. The ideal goal of fire prevention is "to put the fire department out of business" by preventing any fire from happening, he says.

The bureau, however, is limited by its manpower and funds. It now operates only on a part-time basis with Henrici, three inspectors and a secretary. He would like to see the bureau expanded to a full-time organization with himself, seven inspectors and another secretary.

LAST YEAR'S budget for the bureau was $12,000. This year it is $10,000, about 1 per cent of the department's total funding. Henrici estimated the full-time bureau he would like to have would cost $200,000 annually.

Limited spending for fire prevention is not only a village problem, but a national one. On the national average, 95 per cent of all fire department expenditures are for men and equipment to fight fires. From the remaining 5 per cent, administrative and other expenses are taken.

What is left goes for fire prevention, Henrici says.

A problem in obtaining funds for fire prevention is the difficulty in appreciating the work done in fire prevention. It is easy to see where money has gone when fire trucks are purchased or more firemen are hired. It is easy to count the number of fires that happen and the lives and property lost.

If a fire prevention bureau is doing its job correctly, there is not much that can be measured. "We have no idea how many fires we have prevented. There is no way to measure how much was saved by a fire that didn't happen," said Henrici.

THE VILLAGE bureau is responsible for examining proposed plans for a new building, inspecting existing structures, providing educational programs and investigating fires.

"We coordinate all the activities of fire prevention, which includes almost anything," said Henrici.

When a builder wants to construct a building in the village, a copy of the blueprints is sent to the fire prevention bureau for examination. The prints are checked to insure the proposed building meets village fire safety standards, which are adopted from national building standards.

Plans for multi-family buildings and the model plans for homes in a subdivision are also checked.

If a violation is found in the plans, the builder is ordered to make the necessary changes. Occasionally, a builder will dispute the findings of the bureau. A meeting is then arranged with the developer, the building department and the bureau to work out the problem.

IF NECESSARY, the bureau may obtain an official interpretation of the standards from the national organization.

If a builder wants to incorporate a new technique for fire safety in the building, the bureau must determine if the new method meets required standards. Often some type of testing program is developed to insure the new method is satisfactory.

Village ordinance requires every commercial building to be inspected at least once a year. Buildings with special fire hazards are to be inspected every three months.

"We're lucky if we get to inspect the buildings once every two years. We are about three years behind right now," said Henrici.

A PARTMENT buildings and condominiums are also inspected, but lack of time and money prevents any inspection of residential homes. Henrici said single-family homes should be inspected because the greatest number of deaths by fire occur in single-family homes.

During an inspection, the owner or manager of a building will be told of all violations. Later, an official written notice will be given, ordering the violations to be corrected within a certain time period.

In case of a serious violation, such as all emergency exits being blocked, the inspector will order an immediate correction while he is in the building.

Follow-up inspections are made to see if the violations have been corrected.

OCCASIONALLY, the inspectors will enter a building unannounced. Other times, the owner will be told an inspection is scheduled.

"We want to get voluntary compliance. If the violations are corrected before we get there, fine," said Henrici.

Some buildings present repeater problems — the inspectors find the same violations each time they inspect. Henrici said repeaters are usually caused by a lack of education. A class for the owner and employees will be arranged to explain the reason for the ordinance and why the violation presents a danger to lives and property.

Educational programs are also presented to school children and civic groups wanting information about fire prevention.

EDUCATION is the key to fire prevention, but, again, limited time and money prevent the bureau from doing as much education work as it would like to.

When a fire does occur, the bureau may be required to investigate the blaze, determining what happened, why it happened and how it could have been prevented.

With his work as a regular lieutenant in the fire department and his work as head of the fire prevention bureau, Henrici's professional life is certainly concerned with fire fighting. Even in his private life, there is no getting away from fires. His brother John is a captain in the Elk Grove Village fire department, his brother Bob is a member of the Skokie fire department and another brother is a trustee for the Ottawa fire protection district.

Henrici said that at family reunions, "Unfortunately, we all talk shop."

Stabbing at Henrici's leaves victim 'serious'

A Mexican national is in serious condition with stab wounds at Northwest Community Hospital and two brothers are in police custody after a fight yesterday morning at Henrici's Restaurant, 2375 S. Arlington Heights Rd., Arlington Heights.

Police said the trouble apparently began when Carlos S. Meigoza and Tony Carrillo, restaurant employees, began arguing about job assignments. A fistfight between the two then took place, police said.

According to reports, Carrillo telephoned his brother, Jose, who then came to the restaurant. A fight then ensued between Jose Carrillo and Meigoza, police said.

During the fight, Jose Carrillo allegedly stabbed Meigoza with a steak knife. The weapon was thrown away after the incident, police said, and has not been recovered.

MELGOZA WAS taken to the hospital by fire department ambulance, where he is listed in serious condition in the intensive care unit with a stab wound in the side.

Police have charged Jose Carrillo with aggravated assault. He is being held in Cook County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bond on the charge. Tony Carrillo was found to have entered the country illegally from Mexico, and is being held for immigration authorities.

Tony Carrillo swore out a battery warrant on Meigoza, alleging he bit him on the thumb in the first fight, police said. Meigoza will be held on $1,000 bond, when he is released from the hospital, police said.

Meigoza was also found to be an illegal alien, according to police.

A court date of Aug. 10 in the Arlington Heights branch of the Cook County Circuit Court has been set for all involved parties.

FROG DIVE MIGHT be a good name for this swimmer's strange way of plunging into a pool. It doesn't matter on hot, muggy days how one gets in water or where, but just that he finds that well-come relief.

dates has remained the same over the years.

Before being interviewed by the assistant superintendent of the district and principals and staff members of the school, a candidate's teaching certificates and qualifications are checked by the district office.

AFTER MATCHING the teaching candidate with the district's staffing needs, the candidate is interviewed and evaluated.

Theatre trip scheduled

A field trip to Chicago's Goodman Theatre to see the production of "Tennessee Williams" will be sponsored by the Elk Grove Village park district next Wednesday.

Tickets and bus transportation for children 6-13 are available for $2.50 at any of the park district fun center locations. The money and parent permission slips must be returned to the center supervisors by 3 p.m. Tuesday.

Curtain time will be 1:30 p.m. and the field trip will return to the village by 5:30 p.m.

uated on the basis of appearance, communication, teaching methods and attitudes, intelligence and classroom management.

The school principal's evaluation after an interview with a candidate is the actual deciding factor.

"We rely heavily upon the principals and teachers in each school and their judgment in choosing what is best for the children under their care. Each school's principal and his staff must work as a team and develop their own personality towards education within the framework of the district," Waltman said.

WALTMAN feels that the screening and evaluation process used by the district for its 18 elementary and 5 junior high schools is adequate and effective and similar to the teacher selection process in other area districts.

The district still looks for highly competent educators who have met the teaching qualifications specified by the state.

101 pints of blood needed

The Elk Grove Village community blood assurance program needs 101 units by October to meet its quarterly quota of 225 units.

Nanci Vanderweel, program coordinator, said a total of 133 pints were donated Saturday, enabling the village to meet this month's quota. Under the village blood program, if residents donate 225 units every quarter, the blood needs of the entire village will be met at no cost.

Pledges for the next community-wide quarterly blood drive may be made by telephoning the village hall, 439-3900, or by contacting the Alexian Brothers Medical Center.

"I think the community has reason to be proud — since January, Elk Grove residents have donated a total of 575 pints of blood," Mrs. Vanderweel said. "A lot of people have come back two and three times to donate."

Mrs. Vanderweel said 65 units of blood have been used by community residents, ranging from a 7-week-old baby to senior citizens, since the program began.

Woman's condition good after accident

A 30-year-old Arlington Heights woman was listed in good condition yesterday at Alexian Brothers Medical Center following a two-car accident in Elk Grove Village Wednesday evening.

now, I would just not have voted. I don't know what it (Watergate) is all going to lead to."

Johnson also has some opinions on the wallet-draining economic situation.

"I don't like these high prices. As of right now the business I'm in (Johnson works for the National Steel Service Center in Evanston), business has never been so good, but I hate to think what's going to happen when the roof caves in.

"As far as I'm concerned, I think the economy is about as high as it can get, but it's got to break," Johnson said. He said like most Americans he "doesn't know too much" about the Administration's Phase III and IV controls, adding "I don't know if he (Nixon) is swimming in all of this."

"I DO KNOW that I'm eating fewer and fewer meats," he said. "It's just ridiculous. I saw on television how farmers were killing chicks because it's just too expensive to raise them. When a situation gets to that point, it's bad news."

"I'll just do without," Johnson said of coping with the economy. "Inflation is here and it's a reality and if they try to call it anything else, it's poppycock as far as I'm concerned."

Like other Americans, he says the raises he gets aren't enough to keep up with rising prices. "I can't save anything. I'll be happy if I can stay healthy and my family can stay healthy."

"I'm just a middle class guy," he adds of his battle with inflation. "That's the way it is for everyone."

No weeds growing all over the place, eh?

main, however, fall victims to dense populations of weeds, she said.

The Herald surveyed vacant residential lots along Arlington Heights Road from the tollway exits near Algonquin Road to the Elk Grove High School and discovered a variety of densely growing weeds up to five feet in height. The west side of Arlington Heights Road, parallel to the forest preserve area also has densely growing weeds up to five feet in height.

JACK ANDREWS, superintendent of streets in the village, said the area parallel to the forest preserve along Arlington Heights Road is maintained by the Cook County Highway Department. Elk Grove Village's street department is responsible for maintaining 65 acres of ditches, flatlands, and right-of-way within the village during the summer.

"People in the village think that we are responsible for all of the weedy areas in the village, but they're wrong. Much of the areas running through and around the village are responsibilities of the state and county," Andrews said.

In areas where private property owners have vacant lots that are not cared for, "the village's street department cuts their weeds only if it is requested by the health department, and then the property owner is billed for the work," Andrews said.

The department of streets has only had to cut one lot in the industrial park, two years ago, and more recently was requested to cut the weeds in a residential vacant lot in the village.

"WE'LL VOLUNTARILY cut the weeds that are growing in a vacant lot so that they don't become a traffic hazard and obstruct the driver's view around the corner. But, it is the job of every property owner to keep up the maintenance on his own property," Andrews said.

Of the vacant industrial lot property owners only 30 per cent actually respond to the health department's annual notice by cutting down the weeds on their property and keeping up the maintenance on the land, Andrews said.

It's believable when one drives through the industrial park. Vacant lots at intersections and between already established industrial offices are totally overpowered with weeds well exceeding the village limit.

For instance, as Elk Grove Boulevard leads into the industrial area past Tonne Road, property to either side of the road is covered with weeds up to five feet high. Any of the roads running through the industrial park, like Estes Avenue and Lively Boulevard, are dotted with vacant industrial lots that are densely populated with weeds up to six feet in height.

THE INDUSTRIAL PARK IS, by no means, the only section of the village that lends itself to this typical summer eyesore. Weeds in excess of five feet in height line major roads in the village, such as Devon Avenue, Blesterfield Road and Higgins Road. Along ditches and immediate roadsides, and even in large vacant lots along any of these and other roads in the village, weeds are growing uncontrolled and well surpassing the village's eight-inch limit.

Lt. William Kohnke of the Elk Grove Village Police Department explained, "The health department tries to contact property owners who are already exceeding the village's weed height limit before they fine them for it or take action."

As a result, neither the police department nor the street department has been called upon to take action on negligent property owners. While waiting for action to be taken by the owners in answer to letters sent out by the health department, weeds in many of the village's vacant lots continue to grow.

Vacant lots already purchased for use and pending construction, like the lot owned by St. Julian Eymard Catholic School on Leicester Road across from Disney Pool, contain weeds up to five feet in height.

Vacant lots situated in residential areas awaiting construction also foster high weeds, such as in the Village on the Lake area north of Blesterfield Road. Vacant lots to either side of Tonne Road between Landmeier Road and Elk Grove Boulevard also have weeds at least five feet in height.

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American declares

by TONI GINETTI

The Average American thinks the Watergate scandal "is a real mess," that President Nixon knows more about the affair than he's admitted publicly, and that the spiraling inflationary economy is forcing Americans "to do without."

And if he had known in November what he knows now, Mr. Average American would not have voted for Richard Nixon.

Those may not be the opinions of every American, but they are the opinions of Richard Johnson, the man from Rolling Meadows who computers picked last year as the typical, average middle class American.

Johnson drew national attention as the star of two public television broadcasts last year, one on the average American caught in the web of the inflation tangle, and the other a behind-the-scenes view of a presidential campaign through the eyes of the same average Joe.

HIS TV CAREER, made possible by the National Public Affairs Center for Television in Washington (NPACT), came to a peak in November when Johnson, after spending one week traveling and talking personally with Democratic Presidential candidate Sen. George

Richard Johnson

McGovern, revealed he voted for Richard Nixon.

Now, however, in the wake of months of headlines and revelations on the Watergate scandal, Johnson says he would not have voted for the President.

"If I knew as much about this Watergate thing then as I do now, I hate to say this but I probably would not have voted," Johnson said yesterday.

During the week Johnson spent barnstorming the country with McGovern, NPACT correspondent Robert MacNeil asked him several times whether the Watergate affair, which was only beginning to unfold at the time, was influencing

Johnson in his consideration of the candidates.

"I KEPT SAYING no, it wasn't impressing me, and after asking me four times, they finally gave up," Johnson said. "In hindsight, I didn't know that this thing was so deep. I didn't know that much about the Ellsberg break-in (the break-in of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office) but I'm becoming more convinced that Nixon knew about it."

"I believe that Nixon knows about Watergate. I think sooner or later Nixon will have to come out and defend himself. I think that without the tapes (the tapes of conversations in the White House that President Nixon has refused to turn over to Sen. Sam Ervin's committee investigating Watergate) they (the Senate committee) won't get to the bottom of it. But I don't think they will ever really get to the bottom of it. It's a real mess."

Johnson said that while he was on the McGovern campaign trail, the candidate did bring up the Watergate affair "but it didn't leave me with much of an impression because, as I said, I just didn't think it was as deep as it was."

"I give him (McGovern) credit because he did bring it up in several speeches, but I don't think he himself re-

Remember Lincoln County?

Should 6 area townships secede from Cook County? Idea's founders haven't given up yet

Lincoln County resurrected

by MARCIA KRAMER

Remember Lincoln County?

There may still come the day when residents of the Northwest suburbs live in Lincoln, rather than Cook, County.

Republican diehards who hatched the idea two years ago of the six Northwest suburban townships seceding from Cook County and forming a new county haven't given up yet.

They still maintain that the new county would provide local control over local matters, especially the zoning of unincorporated property, and better tax benefits — suburban residents now pay taxes but receive few services from Cook County, they say. Not incidentally, Lincoln County would be controlled by Republicans, rather than the Cook County Democratic machine.

THE GOP's masterminding the new county proposal have come up with a new tactic that they hope will allow Barrington, Elk Grove, Hanover, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships to be known as Lincoln County.

The strategy is this: Present state law stipulates that a change in county boundaries must be approved in referendum by a majority of persons living in that county who vote in the general election. The feeling among Lincoln County advocates is that most Chicago voters wouldn't bother casting ballots on the Lincoln County issue, and thus would be recorded as "no" votes. Therefore, they hope to change the law so only a majority of those persons who vote on the specific issue would be needed.

Sounds simple? Not really. The chances of getting amendatory bills through the General Assembly are mixed, according to State Sen. David J. Regner, R-Mount Prospect, who says he will sponsor the legislation in the next session.

Even if the bills get through the legislature in one piece, Regner says, there's no telling what "maverick" Gov. Daniel Walker is liable to do.

"HE'S TOTALLY unpredictable," Regner said. "If he's mad enough at Mayor Daley at the time the bill is on his desk, there's a good chance he'll sign it."

And if the governor happens to be on good terms with the mayor at the time and doesn't want to jeopardize their tenuous relationship: "He'll kill it."

The Lincoln County question is clearly a politically partisan issue, backed by Republicans who are anxious to remove the heavily GOP suburbs from the Democratic control of Cook County. The Democrats don't especially want to give up the six revenue-producing townships.

So far, Lincoln County has been merely in the talking stage, and the concept, in fact, has been dormant for more than a year.

One of the biggest obstacles facing the new county advocates has been how to get the plan accepted in referendum by a majority of Cook County residents, both those in the six townships and the remainder of the county as well.

With the new strategy, they hope to bypass that hurdle.

"WE'RE GOING TO try to sneak it past the Chicago Democrats," said Wendell E. Jones, the key organizer of the campaign and Palatine village president. "If they know it as the 'Lincoln County bill,' they'll kill it."

Regner, however, a veteran of seven years in the legislature, doesn't hold out much hope for sneaking a bill of this magnitude past the eagle-eyed Democrats.

"A thing like this that would have a very direct effect on the political future of their party they would watch like a hawk," Regner observed. "There's no possibility of sneaking it by."

Regner said a Lincoln County bill could not pass in the House at this time, where, with the death of a Republican legislator, each party has 88 members.

The bill would, however, have a chance in the Senate, he said, where the GOP holds a slim 30-29 majority.

VOTING IN BOTH houses will be along party lines, Regner predicted, as "the mayor would instruct his men to be against it, lock, stock and barrel." Downstate Republicans probably would go along with their suburban counterparts in supporting the legislation, he said.

Not all area legislators look favorably upon Lincoln County. Democratic State Rep. Eugenia S. Chapman of Arlington Heights considers the Lincoln County plan simply a way to create Republican patronage jobs.

"They evidently feel the township jobs aren't enough," she said. "I see no other reason for the existence of Lincoln County than providing jobs for Republican loyalists."

She added cynically: "In these days of Watergate, I don't blame the Republicans for wanting to do something to bolster their power."

Vandals hit train station in Palatine

Young vandals have been hitting the unattended Chicago and North Western Ry. station in Palatine, breaking windows, stealing ash trays and damaging the ceiling.

Palatine police estimate that the most recent damage will cost about $200 to $300 to repair. Youths in that incident slashed soap containers in the depot, broke two windows and punched holes in the ceiling tile. In addition, ash tray stands were stolen and garbage can covers damaged.

Last weekend, a 10-inch length of iron pipe was discovered across the third track near the station. Train officials said the pipe could have derailed a train if it had gone unnoticed.

THE VANDALISM problem has increased since the local cab company changed hands, according to Palatine police. Until this summer, a cab dispatcher

Stabbing at Henrici's leaves victim 'serious'

A Mexican national is in serious condition with stab wounds at Northwest Community Hospital and two brothers are in police custody after a fight yesterday morning at Henrici's Restaurant, 2375 S. Arlington Heights Rd., Arlington Heights.

Police said the trouble apparently began when Carlos S. Melgoza and Tony Carrillo, restaurant employees, began arguing about job assignments. A fistfight between the two then took place, police said.

According to reports, Carrillo telephoned his brother, Jose, who then came to the restaurant. A fight then ensued between Jose Carrillo and Melgoza, police said.

During the fight, Jose Carrillo allegedly stabbed Melgoza with a steak knife. The weapon was thrown away after the incident, police said, and has not been recovered.

MELGOZA was taken to the hospital by fire department ambulance, where he is listed in serious condition in the intensive care unit with a stab wound in the side.

Police have charged Jose Carrillo with aggravated assault. He is being held in Cook County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bond on the charge. Tony Carrillo was found to have entered the country illegally from Mexico, and is being held for immigration authorities.

stayed in the train station into the early morning hours. Now, however, Martin Cab dispatchers use their Des Plaines office for dispatching after 3:30 p.m. each day.

The cab employee had no real responsibility for watching the station during his working hours, but now that no one is regularly in the station, kids have started riding their bicycles through the waiting room and damaging the building without getting caught, police said.

Earlier this week, a 16-year-old Palatine boy was able to steal $150 in cash during the evening from the Martin Cab cash drawer in the train depot. According to Palatine police, the boy took the money and passed it out to his friends. The cash was not missed until two of the youths returned the money to the company and told how they had gotten it.

Parents of the youths involved in the incident are repaying the money which was spent by their children, and the Palatine juvenile officer is handling the case.

Pep squad wins

The Palatine High School pep squad won three awards recently at the 11th Annual Egyptian Cheerleaders Clinic at the DeQuoin state fairgrounds.

The squad won the sparkplug award, a superior rating and a spirit stick in the contest, in which it was compared to standards set by the National Cheerleaders Association of Dallas, Texas. There were 187 girls from 31 cities taking part in the contest.

SHOPPERS in downtown Palatine Saturday will have a pleasant surprise — beginning this week, the village will not enforce parking meters on weekends. Lots available to shoppers at no charge are near the train depot, along the tracks near Brockway Street and at the corner of Palatine Road and Brockway Street.

Village fights gasoline crisis

Consumers aren't alone in finding gasoline a little harder to come by now than in the past.

The Village of Palatine is encountering similar problems in view of the nationwide gas shortage.

Village vehicles are being operated at full capacity, but there's no telling how much longer the pace can be kept up.

"We're not rationing" gas at this time, said Public Works Director James Bennett. "We're not cutting back until we're out of gas," he said.

As a precautionary move, Bennett has ordered drivers to turn off the engines whenever they leave their vehicles, rather than letting the engines idle, eating up precious fuel.

The village is down to 3,000 gallons to service more than 80 vehicles in the police, public works, fire and building departments.

Another supply of gas is due in early August, but Bennett said he's not sure how much the village can expect to receive.

The regular monthly supply is 10,000 gallons. In July, the village was limited to 4,000 gallons and has managed to get through the month only because of a carryover from previous months.

Though the village's supply of gasoline has been shrinking because of the gas shortage, the cost has remained stable. The village is in the third year of a five-year contract with Citgo, and pays 26 cents a gallon.

Fire guts Prospect Heights residence

by TOM VON MALDER

Gasoline fumes exploded yesterday at the Allan Lindstrom home in Prospect Heights, touching off a fire that gutted the house.

Prospect Heights Fire Chief Don Gould told the Herald that it is believed gasoline leaking from a five-gallon can stored in the garage got into the Lindstrom home's sewer system and the fumes were touched off by a spark from a sump pump. Damage to the $30,000 home at 903 Edward Dr. is estimated at $20,000.

John Lindstrom, 16, was in the house when the fire broke out, and was taken to Northwest Community Hospital for treatment of smoke inhalation.

Lindstrom, who watched firemen put out the fire, told the Herald his wife had been in the driveway where the explosion occurred, shortly before noon. She was unhurt.

Most of the damage to the split-level home was restricted to the basement, although smoke damage was heavy throughout the house. The garage is a sunken one, bringing it level with the basement.

LINDSTROM SAID, "We'll fix it up," when asked what he would do in the wake of the fire. Looking over at the house, from which dense smoke was still pouring, he said the structure was still sound and the inside could be redone.

A while later, Lindstrom began carrying out items from the garage and inside of the house. The fire was officially out at 2 p.m., although most of the heavy smoke was gone by 1:30 p.m.

The Edward Drive area, like the majority of unincorporated Prospect Heights, is without fire hydrants. Thus, backup tankers from Wheeling, Glenview Rural, Mount Prospect and Arlington Heights fire departments were called in. Cook County Police arrived at 1:07 p.m. and warned neighborhood children to move back.

NEIGHBORS OF the Lindstroms stood by and watched the efforts to put out the fire. Several brought out cold water and soft drinks for the firemen.

Shortly before 2 p.m., a second fire was reported in Prospect Heights. An Arlington Heights Fire Department truck, which had been standing by at the Prospect Heights station, put out a trash fire at an abandoned barn on Rand Road near Margaret Street.

Arlington Heights Fire Department Capt. Jack Bensen told the Herald the barn fire was "absolutely" set on purpose. He added the fire was easily put out.

There was no damage estimate available. The barn is considered worthless and reportedly was scheduled to be torn down.

In Pequeno murder trial

Psychiatric testimony today

The results of a psychiatric exam, which declare murder suspect Israel Pequeno competent to stand trial, will be introduced into court proceedings today in what could be the final pretrial hearing in the case.

A spokesman for Cook County Criminal Court said yesterday the Cook County state's attorney's prosecutor of the 18-year-old Palatine youth will introduce the results of the exam and clear the way for Judge Benjamin Mackoff to set a date for a trial to begin.

Pequeno, 503 W. Wood, is accused of shooting to death his girlfriend Sharon Soyka, 17, of 3717 Oriole Ln., Rolling Meadows, in her home March 26. Police have said Pequeno shot the girl after she argued she no longer wanted to date him.

A grand jury has indicted Pequeno for murder. Three weeks ago a coroner's jury recommended Pequeno be tried for the girl's murder.

Pequeno has been held without bond in Cook County Jail since the murder. Since the murder he has also been convicted of delivering marijuana, a charge which stems from a Feb. 8 arrest at his home. The youth was free on bond from that case when the murder took place.

Pequeno has been ordered to serve one to three years in prison for the drug offense, but he will not begin that sentence until the outcome of the murder charge is decided.

alized how deep this was," Johnson said. "AS FAR AS I'm concerned now, I think if I had known then what I know now, I would just not have voted. I don't know what it (Watergate) is all going to lead to."

Johnson also has some opinions on the wallet-draining economic situation.

"I don't like these high prices. As of right now the business I'm in (Johnson works for the National Steel Service Center in Evanston), business has never been so good, but I hate to think what's going to happen when the roof caves in."

"As far as I'm concerned, I think the economy is about as high as it can get, but it's got to break," Johnson said. He said like most Americans he "doesn't know too much" about the Administration's Phase III and IV controls, adding "I don't know if he (Nixon) is swimming in all of this."

"I DO KNOW that I'm eating fewer and fewer meats," he said. "It's just ridiculous. I saw on television how farmers were killing chicks because it's just too expensive to raise them. When a situation gets to that point, it's bad news."

"I'll just do without," Johnson said of coping with the economy. "Inflation is here and it's a reality and if they try to call it anything else, it's a poppycock as far as I'm concerned."

Like other Americans, he says the raises he gets aren't enough to keep up with rising prices. "I can't save anything. I'll be happy if I can stay healthy and my family can stay healthy."

"I'm just a middle class guy," he adds of his battle with inflation. "That's the way it is for everyone."

Rural park district plans survey to discover needs

A survey of recreational needs in unincorporated Palatine Township is being planned by the Palatine Rural Park District for this fall.

The district, under the leadership of three new board members from northern subdivisions, is rapidly changing direction from its former role as a tax shelter to a district with parks and programs.

Until this year, the rural park district served as a tax shelter for unincorporated residents who did not want to be annexed into higher-taxing village park districts.

New board members contend that the old park board was not fulfilling its legal obligations, since the state code requires a park board to acquire and maintain park land and provide an organized recreation program. The district was formed in 1950.

The move to expand the dormant park district by a new majority of board members has met stiff opposition from residents of older or more exclusive subdivisions in the township.

THE NEW BOARD members were elected from the three northern subdivisions of Heatherlea, English Valley and Pepper Tree Farms, which house much of the unincorporated township's population.

Petitions to both dissolve the district and to pull out of the district have come from north and west subdivisions, particularly Plum Grove Estates. Park board members will get a report on the petition to disband the district at their August 27 meeting at Prince of Peace Lutheran Church.

Residents of newer subdivisions have been searching for ways to get recreational facilities for their areas. The new park board members say they need to start building a park district now, before more segments of the township are developed without park facilities.

Critics of the park board actions say they do not want to be part of a park district they fear will only serve certain segments of the district.

Correction

Taxes will be going up for residents of the Palatine Rural Park District, but not as much as reported in yesterday's Herald.

Board members recently approved a budget that will mean a $14.50 bill for homes with $10,000 assessed valuation, not a $47 bill per $10,000 assessed valuation.

The tax rate includes a ten-cent operating fund and 4 1/2-cent recreation fund for each $100 of assessed valuation in the district. In past years, residents paid 40 cents per $10,000 assessed valuation. The rural park district takes in most of unincorporated Palatine Township.

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American declares

by TONI GINETTI

The Average American thinks the Watergate scandal "is a real mess," that President Nixon knows more about the affair than he's admitted publicly, and that the spiraling inflationary economy is forcing Americans "to do without."

And if he had known in November what he knows now, Mr. Average American would not have voted for Richard Nixon.

Those may not be the opinions of every American, but they are the opinions of Richard Johnson, the man from Rolling Meadows who computers picked last year as the typical, average middle class American.

Johnson drew national attention as the star of two public television broadcasts last year, one on the average American caught in the web of the inflation tangle, and the other a behind-the-scenes view of a presidential campaign through the eyes of the same average Joe.

HIS TV CAREER, made possible by the National Public Affairs Center for Television in Washington (NPACT), came to a peak in November when Johnson, after spending one week traveling and talking personally with Democratic Presidential candidate Sen. George

Richard Johnson

McGovern, revealed he voted for Richard Nixon.

Now, however, in the wake of months of headlines and revelations on the Watergate scandal, Johnson says he would not have voted for the President.

"If I knew as much about this Watergate thing then as I do now, I hate to say this but I probably would not have voted," Johnson said yesterday.

During the week Johnson spent barnstorming the country with McGovern, NPACT correspondent Robert MacNeil asked him several times whether the Watergate affair, which was only beginning to unfold at the time, was influencing

Johnson in his consideration of the candidates.

"I KEPT SAYING no, it wasn't impressing me, and after asking me four times, they finally gave up," Johnson said. "In hindsight, I didn't know that this thing was so deep. I didn't know that much about the Ellsberg break-in (the break-in of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office) but I'm becoming more convinced that Nixon knew about it."

"I believe that Nixon knows about Watergate. I think sooner or later Nixon will have to come out and defend himself. I think that without the tapes (the tapes of conversations in the White House that President Nixon has refused to turn over to Sen. Sam Ervin's committee investigating Watergate) they (the Senate committee) won't get to the bottom of it. But I don't think they will ever really get to the bottom of it. It's a real mess."

Johnson said that while he was on the McGovern campaign trail, the candidate did bring up the Watergate affair "but it didn't leave me with much of an impression because, as I said, I just didn't think it was as deep as it was."

Remember Lincoln County?

Should 6 area townships secede from Cook County? Idea's founders haven't given up yet

Lincoln County resurrected

by MARCIA KRAMER

Remember Lincoln County?

There may still come the day when residents of the Northwest suburbs live in Lincoln, rather than Cook, County.

Republican diehards who hatched the idea two years ago of the six Northwest suburban townships seceding from Cook County and forming a new county haven't given up yet.

They still maintain that the new county would provide local control over local matters, especially the zoning of unincorporated property, and better tax benefits — suburban residents now pay taxes but receive few services from Cook County, they say. Not incidentally, Lincoln County would be controlled by Republicans, rather than the Cook County Democratic machine.

THE GOPs masterminding the new county proposal have come up with a new tactic that they hope will allow Barrington, Elk Grove, Hanover, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships to be known as Lincoln County.

The strategy is this: Present state law stipulates that a change in county boundaries must be approved in referendum by a majority of persons living in that county who vote in the general election. The feeling among Lincoln County advocates is that most Chicago voters wouldn't bother casting ballots on the Lincoln County issue, and thus would be recorded as "no" votes. Therefore, they hope to change the law so only a majority of those persons who vote on the specific issue would be needed.

Sounds simple? Not really. The chances of getting amendatory bills through the General Assembly are mixed, according to State Sen. David J. Regner, R-Mount Prospect, who says he will sponsor the legislation in the next session.

Even if the bills get through the legislature in one piece, Regner says, there's no telling what "maverick" Gov. Daniel Walker is liable to do.

"HE'S TOTALLY unpredictable," Regner said. "If he's mad enough at Mayor Daley at the time the bill is on his desk, there's a good chance he'll sign it."

And if the governor happens to be on good terms with the mayor at the time and doesn't want to jeopardize their tenuous relationship: "He'll kill it."

The Lincoln County question is clearly a politically partisan issue, backed by Republicans who are anxious to remove the heavily GOP suburbs from the Democratic control of Cook County. The Democrats don't especially want to give up the six revenue-producing townships.

So far, Lincoln County has been merely in the talking stage, and the concept, in fact, has been dormant for more than a year.

One of the biggest obstacles facing the new county advocates has been how to get the plan accepted in referendum by a majority of Cook County residents, both those in the six townships and the remainder of the county as well.

With the new strategy, they hope to bypass that hurdle.

"WE'RE GOING TO try to sneak it past the Chicago Democrats," said Wendell E. Jones, the key organizer of the campaign and Palatine village president. "If they know it as the 'Lincoln County bill,' they'll kill it."

Regner, however, a veteran of seven years in the legislature, doesn't hold out much hope for sneaking a bill of this magnitude past the eagle-eyed Democrats.

"A thing like this that would have a very direct effect on the political future of their party they would watch like a hawk," Regner observed. "There's no possibility of sneaking it by."

Regner said a Lincoln County bill could not pass in the House at this time, where, with the death of a Republican legislator, each party has 88 members.

The bill would, however, have a chance in the Senate, he said, where the GOP holds a slim 30-29 majority.

VOTING IN BOTH houses will be along party lines, Regner predicted, as "the mayor would instruct his men to be against it, lock, stock and barrel." Downstate Republicans probably would go along with their suburban counterparts in supporting the legislation, he said.

Not all area legislators look favorably upon Lincoln County. Democratic State Rep. Eugene S. Chapman of Arlington Heights considers the Lincoln County plan simply a way to create Republican patronage jobs.

"They evidently feel the township jobs aren't enough," she said. "I see no other reason for the existence of Lincoln County than providing jobs for Republican loyalists."

She added cynically: "In these days of Watergate, I don't blame the Republicans for wanting to do something to bolster their power."

Stabbing at Henrici's leaves victim 'serious'

A Mexican national is in serious condition with stab wounds at Northwest Community Hospital and two brothers are in police custody after a fight yesterday morning at Henrici's Restaurant, 2375 S. Arlington Heights Rd., Arlington Heights.

Police said the trouble apparently began when Carlos S. Melgoza and Tony Carrillo, restaurant employees, began arguing about job assignments. A fistfight between the two then took place, police said.

According to reports, Carrillo telephoned his brother, Jose, who then came to the restaurant. A fight then ensued between Jose Carrillo and Melgoza, police said.

During the fight, Jose Carrillo allegedly stabbed Melgoza with a steak knife. The weapon was thrown away after the incident, police said, and has not been recovered.

MELGOZA WAS taken to the hospital by fire department ambulance, where he is listed in serious condition in the intensive care unit with a stab wound in the side.

Police have charged Jose Carrillo with aggravated assault. He is being held in Cook County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bond on the charge. Tony Carrillo was found to have entered the country illegally from Mexico, and is being held for immigration authorities.

Tony Carrillo swore out a battery warrant on Melgoza, alleging he hit him on the thumb in the first fight, police said. Melgoza will be held on $1,000 bond, when he is released from the hospital, police said.

Melgoza was also found to be an illegal alien, according to police.

A court date of Aug. 10 in the Arlington Heights branch of the Cook County Circuit Court has been set for all involved parties.

TOMMY "CHICO" KIRKHAM, 6, gets assistance in suiting up from Frank Krautsk, president of the Rolling Meadows Hockey Club. The club sponsors traveling hockey teams.

Looking on are Al Carlsen (l.) of the Bank of Rolling Meadows and Bill Ceas of the William G. Ceas Company. Both organizations are sponsoring teams in the club this year.

Hockey club opens signup for young boys

Boys 8 to 16 years old may begin registering Aug. 9 for the Rolling Meadows Hockey Club. Registration will be held at the Rolling Meadows sports complex for the season to open in mid-September.

The club is a nonprofit organization which sponsors traveling hockey clubs, giving boys the opportunity to play on a traveling team when they might otherwise not be able to afford the expenses of playing on a team.

Frank Krautsk, president of the hockey club, said teams this year will go to South Bend, Ind. to compete. In the club's three-year history, trips have been made to Detroit, Mich. and Pekin, Ill.

The club is also looking for organizations and companies to sponsor teams in the club. Team sponsors so far are the Bank of Rolling Meadows and the William G. Ceas Company. Organizations interested in sponsoring a team should contact Al Carlsen at the Bank of Rolling Meadows for further information.

The club hopes to field five teams this year, Krautsk said.

All boys in the area are eligible to register for the club.

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American declares

by TONI GINETTI

The Average American thinks the Watergate scandal "is a real mess," that President Nixon knows more about the affair than he's admitted publicly, and that the spiraling inflationary economy is forcing Americans "to do without."

And if he had known in November what he knows now, Mr. Average American would not have voted for Richard Nixon.

Those may not be the opinions of every American, but they are the opinions of Richard Johnson, the man from Rolling Meadows who computers picked last year as the typical, average middle class American.

Johnson drew national attention as the star of two public television broadcasts last year, one on the average American caught in the web of the inflation tangle, and the other a behind-the-scenes view of a presidential campaign through the eyes of the same average Joe.

HIS TV CAREER, made possible by the National Public Affairs Center for Television in Washington (NPACT), came to a peak in November when Johnson, after spending one week traveling and talking personally with Democratic Presidential candidate Sen. George

Richard Johnson

McGovern, revealed he voted for Richard Nixon.

Now, however, in the wake of months of headlines and revelations on the Watergate scandal, Johnson says he would not have voted for the President.

"If I knew as much about this Watergate thing then as I do now, I hate to say this but I probably would not have voted," Johnson said yesterday.

During the week Johnson spent barnstorming the country with McGovern, NPACT correspondent Robert MacNeil asked him several times whether the Watergate affair, which was only beginning to unfold at the time, was influencing

Johnson in his consideration of the candidates.

"I KEPT SAYING no, it wasn't impressing me, and after asking me four times, they finally gave up," Johnson said. "In hindsight, I didn't know that this thing was so deep. I didn't know that much about the Ellsberg break-in (the break-in of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office) but I'm becoming more convinced that Nixon knew about it."

"I believe that Nixon knows about Watergate. I think sooner or later Nixon will have to come out and defend himself. I think that without the tapes (the tapes of conversations in the White House that President Nixon has refused to turn over to Sen. Sam Ervin's committee investigating Watergate) they (the Senate committee) won't get to the bottom of it. But I don't think they will ever really get to the bottom of it. It's a real mess."

Johnson said that while he was on the McGovern campaign trail, the candidate did bring up the Watergate affair "but it didn't leave me with much of an impression because, as I said, I just didn't think it was as deep as it was."

"I give him (McGovern) credit because he did bring it up in several speeches, but I don't think he himself re-

Teachers vote resounding 'yes' for 3-year pact

Teachers in Schaumburg School Dist. 54 voted overwhelmingly yesterday to accept a new three-year contract.

More than 200 teachers who attended a special ratification meeting at Jane Adams Junior High School voted 64-to-1 to accept that pact.

More than 600 of the district's nearly 700 teachers belong to the SEA.

Some concern was expressed over the inability of the SEA to renegotiate salaries during the first two years of the contract. The agreement calls for renewed salary talks after the second year of the contract if the cost of living rises more than 4 1/2 per cent during that time.

Hanson said he had received private assurances from school board members that salaries could be renegotiated after the first year of the contract if the cost of living skyrocketed.

WHEN THE contract agreement was announced last Monday both Hanson and School Board Pres. Donnie Rudd expressed confidence the contract would be accepted by both sides. The school board will vote Aug. 2.

The contract, with an $8,500 base pay, calls for a pay raise of 8.21, 7.48 and 7.31 per cent over the next three years. The percentage increase includes a standard pay raise increment normally given to the teachers.

The agreement also calls for the phasing out of emergency days from the school calendar over the three-year period. Emergency days are usually scheduled to replace days when school is canceled for snow or other reasons. The district will also pay all health insurance premiums for teachers. The teachers currently pay a portion of the health insurance costs.

While this year's contract came after four months of negotiations, the mood of the teachers and the board varied greatly from last year's negotiation sessions when teachers threatened to strike over contract demands.

Park district has grown up —to $372,000

'Twas a little more than 10 years ago today and officials in Schaumburg got wind that people over in Elk Grove Village were going to create a park district, taking Schaumburg into their fold.

And, the Schaumburg people felt they wanted control over their own recreational destiny . . . so some mighty fast work had to be done.

Petitions were circulated and filed to form a Schaumburg Park District. On July 27, 1963 a referendum was held and the proposition was ratified . . . The Schaumburg Park District was founded.

"We had no money" Elaine Bond, secretary of the district since its founding, said about the district's first operations.

THE PARKS ARE operated today with $372,000 for the 1973-74 fiscal year, not including annual payments for a $1.25

HANSON CREDITED the difference in this year's bargaining sessions to the fact that both the board and the teachers hired professional negotiators.

"This tends to remove some of the emotionalism from the talks," Hanson said.

He added that several private sessions held between SEA officers and school board leaders helped to iron out differences.

Hanson and former SEA President Dave Wilson both said the new contract would allow teachers, especially those who were involved in the negotiations, to devote more time to improving the quality of education in the district.

Hanson said that while he expects the school board to approve the contract, he expects the board vote to be close.

GETTING READY FOR a weekend of entertainment, Dick Sunde of the Hoffman Estates Jaycees puts the finishing touches on one of the amusements at the annual Jaycees' Carnival. The carnival will run from 5:30 p.m. until 10:30 p.m. today and 2 p.m. until 11 p.m.

Saturday and Sunday at the Golf-Rose Shopping Center in Hoffman Estates. The yearly event is sponsored to raise funds for the group's numerous local public service projects.

Fired public workmen ask mediator

Hoffman Estates' former public works employees are seeking outside mediation in their dispute with the village.

Petitions asking Gov. Dan Walker to send a mediator to renew talks between the employees and the village are being circulated around town.

The village fired 20 employees, members of Local 2041 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, last Saturday in retaliation for a strike July 19. The employees have been picketing the village hall and the public works garage since their dismissal in an effort to regain the jobs.

THE PETITION was circulated yesterday at a meeting of the Schaumburg Education Association. The former employees are also reportedly canvassing door-to-door in the village encouraging residents to sign. They are also expected to signature-hunt in the area of the Hoffman Estates Jaycees' carnival this weekend at Golf-Rose Shopping Center.

Hoffman Estates Village Mgr. George Longmeyer said yesterday the village is interviewing applicants for the public works jobs. One person has been hired already, and the remainder will be hired within a week, Longmeyer said.

About 50 or 60 persons have applied for the positions, he said, some of them with previous experience in another village.

Termination pay checks are being prepared now, Longmeyer said, for the former public works employees. It's reported the men will refuse to accept the checks. They will be ready Friday, and if they aren't picked up, Longmeyer said he will send them out by registered mail.

More than $60,000 in contracts were awarded this week in Schaumburg.

Parking lot paving at the new Civic Center will be completed within 60 days by Rock Road Construction, Des Plaines, for a low bid of $57,944. Other bidders included Milburn Bros., Inc., Mt. Prospect, and J. A. Johnson Paving, Arlington Heights.

An additional heavy duty truck for public works department use will be purchased from Woodfield Ford, lowest of two bidders. The vehicle was promised for delivery within six weeks for a total of $4,292.

Levitt building stalled by complaints

Levitt and Sons' future construction of single and multiple-family dwellings in Schaumburg will depend on whether the builder is able to resolve complaints of existing Levitt homeowners, village trustees said this week.

Trustees agreed to release 76 building permits for Sheffield Manor quadhome Unit 3. However, copies of more than 500 unsatisfied complaints are being given to the village engineering and building departments to monitor.

If Levitt fails to resolve existing complaints, however, this lack of action will result in an immediate order by the village for the company to stop work.

Although plans for Unit 3 were approved by the village board April 24, trustees agreed then not to release building permits until the developer had corrected code violations and public improvement problems.

SIMILAR complaints prompted trustees to slow the issuance of permits in Sheffield Park June 26. Since then, individual plans for each house must be submitted prior to issuance of permits. Inspections of each required phase of construction are also being individually handled.

Representatives of Sheffield Manor Homeowners Association told trustees Tuesday that repairs have been made to areas which the residents share in common in the condominium complex, but interior problems have not been totally corrected.

Complaints deal largely with exterior paint peeling, failure to sod lawns and sidewalk cracks.

Levitt homeowners expressed concern that if the builder is permitted to continue new construction, their problems will remain unsolved.

THEIR FEELINGS were echoed by several representatives of Sheffield Towne, a townhouse complex being developed by Levitt.

The builder plans to develop an additional 200 single family homes for which zoning has been granted and is seeking annexation of another 183 acres for single family cluster development.

Ken Campbell, a regional engineer with Levitt, assured trustees and homeowners present at the village board meeting this week, that efforts are being made to quickly clear up all service problems.

Campbell predicted that the backlog on service calls should be reduced within several weeks.

THE THRILL OF VICTORY did not come without some effort for Fred Tonocchi of Hoffman Estates this week in the Paddock Olympics Tug of War event. The youngster and 11 other teammates helped the park district squad finish second in the event and sixth overall in the two-day competition.

Public roads in 'Dunbar' OK'd

Concurring in the recommendation of the plans commission, the village board approved plans this week for public roads in Dunbar Lakes, an apartment condominium complex at Schaumburg and Plum Grove roads.

That approval, however, carries the request that the proposed Dunbar Drive, a main access road in and through the development, be renamed.

The stipulation, which originated in the plan commission, took Mayor Robert O. Atcher and five trustees by surprise.

Dick Nomellini, plans commission chairman, explained that for the past several years his group has tried to deter developers from using their names on roads which may eventually be extended into another subdivision.

"It all goes back to the case of Weatherfield Way and its eventual extension into Lancer Park," said Nomellini.

Nomellini agreed that Dunbar and other developers may easily cite precedent for street naming in Churchill Drive, Timbercrest Drive and other main access streets.

"If it is a captured road (a street not liable to be extended into another subdivision), it makes no difference but, essentially, we do not like to impose the name of one developer on another," he added.

Trustees agreed to the revision of developers guidelines to include reference to street naming and to similarly amend the existing subdivision control ordinance.

million bond issue approved in March 1970.

"We had no land" either, she added, but the five men elected to the park board were given responsibility by the village board for Schaumburg's Civic Pool and the Jennings House Youth Center, both located at Sharon Lane and Civic Drive.

Those men included Robert Bock, who is now park board president. He has served with the board continuously over the past ten years. Others were Leo Grosch, the first president; George Friese, Josephine Sosine and Otto Dobrovolsky.

The village also gave the new district a small park at Webster and Warwick so they had 15 acres of land to care for.

"It was lots of fun," said Mrs. Bond. "The board members would go over and help clean the pool and cut the lawns when they got too bad."

TODAY THERE are 14 parks covering 175 acres. There's a second pool named for Schaumburg's Mayor Robert O. Atcher, located along Springguth Road, and a major administration and recreation facility, the Ellsworth A. Meineke Community Center at 220 E. Weatherfield Way.

Using the facilities are 5,000 persons who weekly participate in the district's 60 recreational programs and a similar number who enjoy the district's two pools.

IT'S TAKING 185 full-time and part-time persons this summer to work at maintaining the parks and who instruct and supervise the district's programs.

They're under the supervision of Paul Derda, park district director, who came to Schaumburg in June 1968 sharing his time between Schaumburg and Roselle. He became Schaumburg's full time park director in early 1970.

The district's first ten years have shown huge growth. But, there are dreams for the next ten that are Schaumburg-sized in every way . . . a 400-acre nature center, golf course, an olympic pool with U.S. Olympic competition televised nationwide.

It's all part of the community's think big psychology.

You've come a long way baby . . . but you've only just begun.

Mens' softball divisions tied

With only a few weeks left in the season, both divisions of the Schaumburg Park District's Men Softball League have teams tied for first place.

In the Monday-Wednesday league, the Airport Lounge and Schaumrose Inn both have won 11 games. The Inn squad pulled into contention last week by beating National Foods 20-5 and then bottled up Union Oil 19-4.

Meanwhile the Airport Lounge team bombarded Roselle Marathon 15-3 to retain a slice of the top spot.

The Tuesday-Thursday league drew even after McMahon Realty foreclosed on the Red Onions 8-7 and beat Scarlet Glow 10-2.

The Onions, who had held the league lead until last week, managed a close 6-4 win over the Castaways.

Rounding out the Monday-Wednesday league are the Roselle Marathon, Homefinders Realty, Marshall Field, National Foods and Union Oil.

In the Tuesday-Thursday league the Castaways, Larry's Standard Oil, and Scarlet Glow trail the league leaders.

alized how deep this was," Johnson said. "AS FAR AS I'm concerned now, I think if I had known then what I know now, I would just not have voted. I don't know what it (Watergate) is all going to lead to."

Johnson also has some opinions on the wall-drawing economic situation.

"I don't like these high prices. As of right now the business I'm in (Johnson works for the National Steel Service Center in Evanston), business has never been so good, but I hate to think what's going to happen when the roof caves in."

"As far as I'm concerned, I think the economy is about as high as it can get, but it's got to break," Johnson said. He said like most Americans he "doesn't know too much" about the Administration's Phase III and IV controls, adding "I don't know if he (Nixon) is swimming in all of this."

"I DO KNOW that I'm eating fewer and fewer meats," he said. "It's just ridiculous. I saw on television how farmers were killing chicks because it's just too expensive to raise them. When a situation gets to that point, it's bad news."

"I'll just do without," Johnson said of coping with the economy. "Inflation is here and it's a reality and if they try to call it anything else, it's poppycock as far as I'm concerned."

Like other Americans, he says the raises he gets aren't enough to keep up with rising prices. "I can't save anything. I'll be happy if I can stay healthy and my family can stay healthy.

"I'm just a middle class guy," he adds of his battle with inflation. "That's the way it is for everyone."

Motorola variation given

A variation to allow installation of a sophisticated fire protection system in Motorola's proposed corporate headquarters was approved by Schaumburg village officials this week.

Plans for the 12-story building being designed for inclusion in the existing Motorola complex at Meacham Road and Route 62 call for sprinkling systems being installed floor by floor.

The variance granted this week will allow the elimination of heat and smoke detectors, currently required by ordinance, in all areas not covered by sprinkler heads. Also permitted in the Motorola case is a reduction of the fire resistance rating from two hours to one hour in all partitioning walls.

"This is without a doubt an improvement over any existing system," Fire Chief Lloyd Abrahamson told the village board Tuesday.

Abrahamson said he would favor amending the current village ordinance to provide such a "trade-off" in all future instances.

While board members approved the Motorola request, the subject was referred to the village building committee for further study and possible amendment.

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American declares

by TONI GINETTI

The Average American thinks the Watergate scandal "is a real mess," that President Nixon knows more about the affair than he's admitted publicly, and that the spiraling inflationary economy is forcing Americans "to do without."

And if he had known in November what he knows now, Mr. Average American would not have voted for Richard Nixon.

Those may not be the opinions of every American, but they are the opinions of Richard Johnson, the man from Rolling Meadows who computers picked last year as the typical, average middle class American.

Johnson drew national attention as the star of two public television broadcasts last year, one on the average American caught in the web of the inflation tangle, and the other a behind-the-scenes view of a presidential campaign through the eyes of the same average Joe.

HIS TV CAREER, made possible by the National Public Affairs Center for Television in Washington (NPACT), came to a peak in November when Johnson, after spending one week traveling and talking personally with Democratic Presidential candidate Sen. George

Richard Johnson

McGovern, revealed he voted for Richard Nixon.

Now, however, in the wake of months of headlines and revelations on the Watergate scandal, Johnson says he would not have voted for the President.

"If I knew as much about this Watergate thing then as I do now, I hate to say this but I probably would not have voted," Johnson said yesterday.

During the week Johnson spent barnstorming the country with McGovern, NPACT correspondent Robert MacNeil asked him several times whether the Watergate affair, which was only beginning to unfold at the time, was influencing

Johnson in his consideration of the candidates.

"I KEPT SAYING no, it wasn't impressing me, and after asking me four times, they finally gave up," Johnson said. "In hindsight, I didn't know that this thing was so deep. I didn't know that much about the Ellsberg break-in (the break-in of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office) but I'm becoming more convinced that Nixon knew about it."

"I believe that Nixon knows about Watergate. I think sooner or later Nixon will have to come out and defend himself. I think that without the tapes (the tapes of conversations in the White House that President Nixon has refused to turn over to Sen. Sam Ervin's committee investigating Watergate) they (the Senate committee) won't get to the bottom of it. But I don't think they will ever really get to the bottom of it. It's a real mess."

Johnson said that while he was on the McGovern campaign trail, the candidate did bring up the Watergate affair "but it didn't leave me with much of an impression because, as I said, I just didn't think it was as deep as it was."

"I give him (McGovern) credit because he did bring it up in several speeches, but I don't think he himself re-

Damage estimated at $20,000 $50,000 home gutted; blaze touched off by gas fumes

by TOM VON MALDER

Gasoline fumes exploded yesterday at the Allan Lindstrom home in Prospect Heights, touching off a fire that gutted the house.

Prospect Heights Fire Chief Don Gould told the Herald that it is believed gasoline leaking from a five-gallon can stored in the garage got into the Lindstrom home's sewer system and the fumes were touched off by a spark from a sump pump. Damage to the $50,000 home at 903 Edward Dr. is estimated at $20,000.

fire. Several brought out cold water and soft drinks for the firemen.

Shortly before 2 p.m., a second fire was reported in Prospect Heights. An Arlington Heights Fire Department truck, which had been standing by at the Prospect Heights station, put out a trash fire at an abandoned barn on Rand Road near Margaret Street.

Arlington Heights Fire Department Capt. Jack Bensen told the Herald the barn fire was "absolutely" set on purpose. He added the fire was easily put out.

There was no damage estimate available. The barn is considered worthless and reportedly was scheduled to be torn down.

PROSPECT HEIGHTS firemen had to use air masks yesterday as they fought a fire at 903 Edward Dr. Heavy smoke poured from the Allan Lindstrom home, as the fire gutted the insides. Officials believe gasoline fumes exploded.

ALLAN LINDSTROM of Prospect Heights, surveys his home as it is ravaged by fire. Fire officials said the blaze caused $20,000 damage to the home at 903 Edward Dr. Lindstrom's 16-year-old son, John, who was in the house when the fire struck, had to be treated for smoke inhalation.

John Lindstrom, 16, was in the house when the fire broke out, and was taken to Northwest Community Hospital for treatment of smoke inhalation.

Lindstrom, who watched firemen put out the fire, told the Herald his wife had been in the driveway where the explosion occurred, shortly before noon. She was unhurt.

Most of the damage to the split-level home was restricted to the basement, although smoke damage was heavy throughout the house. The garage is a sunken one, bringing it level with the basement.

LINDSTROM SAID, "We'll fix it up," when asked what he would do in the wake of the fire. Looking over at the house, from which dense smoke was still pouring, he said the structure was still sound and the inside could be redone.

A while later, Lindstrom began carrying out items from the garage and insides of the house. The fire was officially out at 2 p.m., although most of the heavy smoke was gone by 1:30 p.m.

The Edward Drive area, like the majority of unincorporated Prospect Heights, is without fire hydrants. Thus, backup tankers from Wheeling, Glenview Rural, Mount Prospect and Arlington Heights fire departments were called in. Cook County Police arrived at 1:07 p.m. and warned neighborhood children to move back.

NEIGHBORS OF the Lindstroms stood by and watched the efforts to put out the

MSD trustee backs stormwater basin

Officials of Mount Prospect and Arlington Heights have won the support of Metropolitan Sanitary District Trustee James Kirie in efforts to get the MSD to build a stormwater basin between the two communities now.

Kirie said yesterday that if enough money can be found, he will recommend to the full MSD board that the basin be started within a year. The next meeting of the MSD board is set for Aug. 16.

"If we can find the money, we're going to help them (Arlington Heights and Mount Prospect)," Kirie said. He is chairman of the MSD's flood control committee. "It's necessary. It should be done," he said.

KIRIE WAS talking about the complete $4.8 million basin, while the two villages were just trying to get a partial basin put in for now. The partial basin would cost $1.2 million. Local flood officials reacted in surprise when told of Kirie's remarks, but they were pleased.

The stormwater basin, when built, will be north of Central Road at Busse Road on the border of the two towns. It is expected to relieve Arlington Heights' flooding by providing space for its stormwater runoff and to relieve Mount Prospect's flooding by holding back stormwater from Weller Creek.

Kirie said the basin would only hold storm water at first, as requested by Mount Prospect. At a later date, he said, a decision will be made whether to permit combined sewer lines to feed into a portion of the basin. The original MSD plans called for that and a reclamation plant.

UNDER CURRENT MSD plans the basin would not be constructed until the 1980's. However, local officials have had a series of meetings with Kirie in an attempt to have the MSD change its priorities to include the basin work as a first part of the Underflow plan. The Underflow plan is a system of deep tunnels designed to store storm water and sewage underground.

Kirie said he wants the MSD to give the two towns a commitment "as soon as possible" so the communities' local flood plans, including any referendum, will be successful.

Arlington Heights' is planning a referendum but has delayed it three times and the Mount Prospect Village Board has postponed its decision on funding until Sept. 11.

Both communities' village boards are to pass resolutions asking for the basin. Copies of the resolutions will be sent with a cover letter to the MSD. Kirie said these will be given to his staff, who will in turn give him a report. Then, if the money is found, Kirie will make his recommendation.

MANNED BY Sgt. James P. Gregory, center yesterday is one tactic to entice men to enlist in the Army.

Recruiters aim at quotas

Selling of the Army '73 a tough job

by BETTY LEE

The girl who walked up to the Army display stand was probably 16 years old. She had long brown hair pulled back over her ears, monogrammed earrings and was dressed impeccably.

She stopped, picked up a handful of brochures and began looking through them. But before she could read the first few lines, the Army recruiter was at her side. And for the next half hour she was learning everything from soup to nuts about the military and why she should join. This girl, perhaps, had no more intention of joining the Army than dropping out of high school, but she had stopped and she was a prospect.

That's the way it is these days in military recruiting. The new fiscal year began July 1 and quotas have to be met just like those of a salesman.

So the Army and other branches of service are pulling out all the stops in an effort to enlist men and women. The display stand at Woodfield Shopping Center in Schaumburg is an example.

THERE WERE two recruiters, a man and a woman, who stood alongside a portable movie screen and piles of brochures. This was their ammunition and men and women between the age of 18 and 21 were their targets. They were hustling just as in their jobs depended upon it and this may be the case.

The passive recruiters are no longer. They now are heading to schools, shopping centers, ball games or "wherever the people are" according to Lt. Col. Peter Clifford of the U.S. Army. "We have to make it convenient for the people and go where they go," he said.

With the beginning of a new recruiting year for all volunteer forces, the officers are scrambling with new methods to entice young men and women into their offices. Because there is no draft, the role of the recruiter has changed.

"It is a selling game," said Sgt. William Thomsen of the Marine Corps. "Five years ago a man might walk into the office and say, 'I want to join the Marines.' The recruiter would probably say, 'So what? So does everyone else.' But now, the recruiter will say, 'Sit right down and I'll tell you the whole story.'"

During the last fiscal year, the Army alone poured more than $28.7 million in advertising for active army inductees, according to Col. Gerald Childress, director of advertising and information for the U.S. Army at Ft. Sheridan.

CHILDRESS INDICATED that in 1973 $138 was spent in advertising per soldier, as compared to the $35 spent in 1970.

More ads, posters, commercials and recruiters are used today in hope of bringing the potential inductees to meet quotas set for active armed forces.

"Vietnam had a terrible effect on the Army," said Clifford, also stationed at Ft. Sheridan. "The Army had to act in an unnatural atmosphere, mostly political."

"It brought in undesirables and things like My Lai happened," he said. "But as Vietnam diminishes, people will remember the favorable and social importance. We've got to re-educate the people... we're not ogres... we don't thrive on killing."

"The Vietnam war was an unpopular war," said Thomsen. "A lot of people didn't want to go and they don't connect the service as a way to get ahead in education. The immediate connection is to go out and shoot people."

IN TALKING WITH potential inductees, the recruiters emphasize the opportunity and education, rather than service.

Combat and other regimented duties are still very much a part of the military, and the recruiter does not disguise or hide the less attractive aspects of duty, according to Clifford.

"But we're discovering, although no men like to say so, that there's a need to serve the country," he said. "I think they're beginning to enlist for the right reasons."

A handful of new incentives have been added to bolster the attractiveness of enlisting. For example, in January, there was an increase in base pay, thus more than doubling the amount to $307 a month.

"But we have to work harder and longer hours for the same amount of people," said Roger Johnson, a Navy recruiter working in Palatine. Johnson said they have enlisted five persons this month, the normal number. "The numbers are slowly (increasing) but surely," he said.

IN CHICAGO, the Army met 72 per cent of its recruiting objective, the Army met 85 per cent nationwide, according to Clifford. "It's too early to say how we're doing this year, since the fiscal year just started," he said. "But it'll work... it'll just take some time."

Air Force Recruiter Sgt. Robert Hill reported that quotas were met in his office at 800 Lee St. in Des Plaines.

The Busse-Biermann Hardware Store, at 8 W. Busse is now the Anderson-Biermann store! Robert Anderson of Palatine became a partner with Frank Biermann as of June 1.

Durable Frank, now 77 years old, has been one of the best known and best liked merchants in downtown Mount Prospect for the past 53 years. Says Frank, "I still expect to be here at the store for a while. Lord willing. I do, though, have a little arthritis that gives me some trouble."

Bob Anderson's background is in the portable tool business with Black & Decker. He's busily learning the plumbing end of the business from Frank.

Anderson's son is working in the store and his wife works occasionally, primarily on the books. The family is planning to move from Palatine to Mount Prospect sometime in the near future.

Jim will have a lot of time to reflect on the trip. Upon their return to Mount Prospect, he had a bicycle accident and will be spending four to six weeks in traction at Northwest Community Hospital.

PAULA CHARRON, 304 N. Oak, was honored last Tuesday at a surprise farewell luncheon at the home of Isabel Gibson, 715 N. Fairview. The Charrons will be moving to Connecticut later this summer.

Paula has been heavily involved with Fairview School's PTA board, serving as chairman of the school's library volunteers. She is generally considered an efficient gal who is always willing to help in any capacity at the school. Her husband Leo has been active too, and served as PTA treasurer last year.

Paula was given a charm bracelet from the board. She had previously received parting gifts from the library volunteer group and from the Fairview teachers. Twenty-three women from the PTA board and library helpers were present for the luncheon.

It's Mount Prospect's loss as the Charrons leave!

Charge youth shot pair with pellets

Mount Prospect police have charged a 16-year-old Des Plaines youth in connection with a pellet gun shooting incident Monday.

Shortly before 2 p.m. Monday, Albert A. Baca, 16, of 29 Poplar St., Arlington Heights, and Mike Baldwin, 15, of 450 Murray, Des Plaines, were struck by pellets while riding minibikes in a field at Elmhurst and Algonquin roads. Baca was hit in the head and Baldwin was struck in the leg.

Police said the youth was charged with discharging a pellet gun. He is to appear Aug. 22 in the Mount Prospect branch of Cook County Circuit Court. The arrest was made Wednesday night.

Girl assaulted at Randhurst

A 15-year-old Mount Prospect girl was assaulted Wednesday night at the Randhurst Shopping Center, according to police.

Police said the girl was sitting on the sidewalk outside the shopping center when a man leaving Sun Drugs asked her for a match. She told him she had none and the man then began to choke her, police said.

A companion of the girl's ran into the store shouting for help. The attacker was last seen running through the parking lot. Police said he was a white male, about 30 years old, six feet in height and 170 pounds. He had medium length hair and was wearing a light blue shirt and tan pants. The attack took place about 9 p.m., the girl said.

Youthful motorist caught after chase

Rolf D. Molzahn, 17, of 90 E. Bradley St., Des Plaines, was charged with stunting, speeding and attempting to elude a police officer. He is to appear Sept. 19 in the Mount Prospect branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

The chase began about 10 p.m. when police said they saw Molzahn's vehicle allegedly "stunting" while eastbound on Lincoln Street. Police said that after an attempt was made to stop the vehicle, the car sped down Busse Road, Greenbrier Drive, Edgewood Lane, and Lonnquist Boulevard.

Police said Molzahn left the car on Lonnquist Boulevard, just east of Meier Road, and ran into some backyards. Other policemen were called in and he was caught, they said.

Bike factory tour 'an adventure'

by MARY HOULIHAN

What is it like to walk through a factory that turns out 6,500 bikes a day, 1.3 million bikes a year?

An adventure is the answer. At least that's how 15 children from the River Trails Dist. 26 summer school saw it recently when they visited the Schwinn bike factory on N. Kildare Avenue in Chicago.

The 15 children, all students in Jay Brown's "Expanding Your View" class went to see how Schwinn puts together those shiny new, three-, five- and 10-speed bikes that have been growing in popularity on suburban streets.

And the kids were ready for a day of real adventuring.

Stephen Schwartz was the tour guide for the day. Working at Schwinn is a family tradition for Schwartz. "My father worked here and my uncle has worked here. In fact, at one time, I had six uncles working here," Schwartz tells the kids.

As Schwartz introduces himself, he passes out safety glasses to each of the students.

"Federal law requires that you wear these glasses," he cautions the children. Dutifully, each of them dons the protective "specs."

"PETER LOOKS like a movie star," croons one little girl.

"Sneaky, man, sneaky," Peter retorts.

"This is one of four Schwinn factories in the area," Schwartz tells the children, getting them back to the business of the day. "It's the only facility that a finished Schwinn bike comes out of. The other factories make component parts of the bike. Then those are shipped over here."

More to come. Schwartz tells the students that there are 1,500 parts in a 10-speed bike and all the kids give an incredulous look. But not nearly so incredulous as when he tells them a Schwinn that comes out of this factory ranges in cost from about $107 to about $575, "depending on the model and what they have on them."

As they walk through the factory and see many of the people who put together these 1,500 parts on the bike, the children begin to realize how costly it could be.

First stop on the tour is the chrome plating facility. The kids line up in front of the giant assembly line where each part of the bike is dipped into a big machine that applies a shiny coating to each. "Parts of the bike are being dipped into different tanks of acid and water," Schwartz explains.

WHY THE coating?

"One is for appearance," Schwartz says. "But it also rustproofs the bike."

The children listen attentively, not wanting to miss anything as they watch the process in front of them. They are amazingly quiet, letting Brown ask most of the questions. It's almost as if they are afraid they'll miss something if they take time to ask a question.

The group moves down to the section where the hand-made bikes are put together. "In one day, we make about 6,500 bikes," Schwartz explains, but we can only make about 5,000 hand-made bikes a year." It begins to come clear why the hand-made bike is so expensive. "All Paramount (handmade) bikes are sold out for this entire year," he tells them, with about a year waiting time.

Slowly the group winds around, visiting next the painting facility ("This is neat," one kid exclaims as a shiny yellow model is lifted before him). The decimal section and the section where the spokes are fitted onto the wheel are also seen.

"You want to try this?" a lady working on the spokes asks a blond-haired boy.

"No," he says seriously, shaking his head. She laughs.

"If you don't do it fast, you don't make any money," she cautions the rest of them. The children are noticeably impressed.

THE HIGH POINT of the morning's tour comes at the assembly line, where the bikes are finally put together and stored in boxes for shipment to dealers. "Each person on the line has a different job to do. Otherwise it won't turn out right," Schwartz tells them.

They all watch as one person fits on a bolt or checks the spokes on a bike or fastens on a wheel. "A Short Cut Can Ruin A Job" a sign above the line warns the employees.

If there is a mistake, it seems as if it would be almost impossible to catch because the line would be moving so fast.

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American declares

by TONI GINETTI

The Average American thinks the Watergate scandal "is a real mess," that President Nixon knows more about the affair than he's admitted publicly, and that the spiraling inflationary economy is forcing Americans "to do without."

And if he had known in November what he knows now, Mr. Average American would not have voted for Richard Nixon.

Those may not be the opinions of every American, but they are the opinions of Richard Johnson, the man from Rolling Meadows who computers picked last year as the typical, average middle class American.

Johnson drew national attention as the star of two public television broadcasts last year, one on the average American caught in the web of the inflation tangle, and the other a behind-the-scenes view of a presidential campaign through the eyes of the same average Joe.

HIS TV CAREER, made possible by the National Public Affairs Center for Television in Washington (NPACT), came to a peak in November when Johnson, after spending one week traveling and talking personally with Democratic Presidential candidate Sen. George

Richard Johnson

McGovern, revealed he voted for Richard Nixon.

Now, however, in the wake of months of headlines and revelations on the Watergate scandal, Johnson says he would not have voted for the President.

"If I knew as much about this Watergate thing then as I do now, I hate to say this but I probably would not have voted," Johnson said yesterday.

During the week Johnson spent barnstorming the country with McGovern, NPACT correspondent Robert MacNeil asked him several times whether the Watergate affair, which was only beginning to unfold at the time, was influencing

Johnson in his consideration of the candidates.

"I KEPT SAYING no, it wasn't impressing me, and after asking me four times, they finally gave up," Johnson said. "In hindsight, I didn't know that this thing was so deep. I didn't know that much about the Ellsberg break-in (the break-in of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office) but I'm becoming more convinced that Nixon knew about it."

"I believe that Nixon knows about Watergate. I think sooner or later Nixon will have to come out and defend himself. I think that without the tapes (the tapes of conversations in the White House that President Nixon has refused to turn over to Sen. Sam Ervin's committee investigating Watergate) they (the Senate committee) won't get to the bottom of it. But I don't think they will ever really get to the bottom of it. It's a real mess."

Johnson said that while he was on the McGovern campaign trail, the candidate did bring up the Watergate affair "but it didn't leave me with much of an impression because, as I said, I just didn't think it was as deep as it was."

"I give him (McGovern) credit because he did bring it up in several speeches, but I don't think he himself re-

Remember Lincoln County?

Should 6 area townships secede from Cook County? Idea's founders haven't given up yet

Lincoln County resurrected

by MARCIA KRAMER

Remember Lincoln County?

There may still come the day when residents of the Northwest suburbs live in Lincoln, rather than Cook, County.

Republican diehards who hatched the idea two years ago of the six Northwest suburban townships seceding from Cook County and forming a new county haven't given up yet.

They still maintain that the new county would provide local control over local matters, especially the zoning of unincorporated property, and better tax benefits — suburban residents now pay taxes but receive few services from Cook County, they say. Not incidentally, Lincoln County would be controlled by Republicans, rather than the Cook County Democratic machine.

THE GOP's masterminding the new county proposal have come up with a new tactic that they hope will allow Barrington, Elk Grove, Hanover, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships to be known as Lincoln County.

The strategy is this: Present state law stipulates that a change in county boundaries must be approved in referendum by a majority of persons living in that county who vote in the general election. The feeling among Lincoln County advocates is that most Chicago voters wouldn't bother casting ballots on the Lincoln County issue, and thus would be recorded as "no" votes. Therefore, they hope to change the law so only a majority of those persons who vote on the specific issue would be needed.

Sounds simple? Not really. The chances of getting amendatory bills through the General Assembly are mixed, according to State Sen. David J. Regner, R-Mount Prospect, who says he will sponsor the legislation in the next session.

Even if the bills get through the legislature in one piece, Regner says, there's no telling what "maverick" Gov. Daniel Walker is liable to do.

"HE'S TOTALLY unpredictable," Regner said. "If he's mad enough at Mayor Daley at the time the bill is on his desk, there's a good chance he'll sign it."

And if the governor happens to be on good terms with the mayor at the time and doesn't want to jeopardize their tenuous relationship: "He'll kill it."

The Lincoln County question is clearly a politically partisan issue, backed by Republicans who are anxious to remove the heavily GOP suburbs from the Democratic control of Cook County. The Democrats don't especially want to give up the six revenue-producing townships.

So far, Lincoln County has been merely in the talking stage, and the concept, in fact, has been dormant for more than a year.

Fire guts Prospect Heights home

by TOM VON MALDER

Gasoline fumes exploded yesterday at the Allan Lindstrom home in Prospect Heights, touching off a fire that gutted the house.

Prospect Heights Fire Chief Don Gould told the Herald that it is believed gasoline leaking from a five-gallon can stored in the garage got into the Lindstrom home's sewer system and the fumes were touched off by a spark from a sump pump. Damage to the $50,000 home at 903 Edward Dr. is estimated at $20,000.

John Lindstrom, 16, was in the house when the fire broke out, and was taken to Northwest Community Hospital for treatment of smoke inhalation.

Lindstrom, who watched firemen put out the fire, told the Herald his wife had been in the driveway where the explosion occurred, shortly before noon. She was unhurt.

Most of the damage to the split-level home was restricted to the basement, although smoke damage was heavy throughout the house. The garage is a sunken one, bringing it level with the basement.

LINDSTROM SAID, "We'll fix it up," when asked what he would do in the wake of the fire. Looking over at the house, from which dense smoke was still pouring, he said the structure was still sound and the inside could be redone.

A while later, Lindstrom began carrying out items from the garage and inside of the house. The fire was officially out at 2 p.m., although most of the heavy smoke was gone by 1:30 p.m.

The Edward Drive area, like the majority of unincorporated Prospect Heights, is without fire hydrants. Thus, backup tankers from Wheeling, Glenview Rural, Mount Prospect and Arlington Heights fire departments were called in. Cook County Police arrived at 1:07 p.m. and warned neighborhood children to move back.

NEIGHBORS OF the Lindstroms stood by and watched the efforts to put out the fire. Several brought out cold water and soft drinks for the firemen.

Shortly before 2 p.m., a second fire was reported in Prospect Heights. An Arlington Heights Fire Department truck, which had been standing by at the Prospect Heights station, put out a trash fire at an abandoned barn on Rand Road near Margaret Street.

Arlington Heights Fire Department Capt. Jack Benson told the Herald the barn fire was "absolutely" set on purpose. He added the fire was easily put out.

There was no damage estimate available. The barn is considered worthless and reportedly was scheduled to be torn down.

The Kenroy Corp. has agreed to cut tall weeds growing in the Arlington Heights industrial park in answer to complaints from neighboring homeowners.

Village Health Director Frank Charlton said the uncut weeds will be mowed this morning and that rough ground that has prevented cutting in the past will be leveled.

Agreement on this matter came at a meeting yesterday between Berkeley Square homeowners and the Kenroy company, developer of the Arlington Industrial Research Center.

Psychiatric test results today in murder case

The results of a psychiatric exam, which declare murder suspect Israel Pequeno competent to stand trial, will be introduced into court proceedings today in what could be the final pretrial hearing in the case.

A spokesman for Cook County Criminal Court said yesterday the Cook County state's attorney's prosecutor of the 18-year-old Palatine youth will introduce the results of the exam and clear the way for Judge Benjamin Mackoff to set a date for a trial to begin.

Pequeno, 503 W. Wood, is accused of shooting to death his girlfriend Sharon Soyka, 17, of 3717 Oriole Ln., Rolling Meadows, in her home March 26. Police have said Pequeno shot the girl after she argued she no longer wanted to date him.

A grand jury has indicted Pequeno for murder. Three weeks ago a coroner's jury recommended Pequeno be tried for the girl's murder.

Pequeno has been held without bond in Cook County Jail since the murder. Since the murder he has also been convicted of delivering marijuana, a charge which stems from a Feb. 8 arrest at his home. The youth was free on bond from that case when the murder took place.

Pequeno has been ordered to serve one to three years in prison for the drug offense, but he will not begin that sentence until the outcome of the murder charge is decided.

Utility money to be refunded to schools

The Village of Arlington Heights is planning to refund $70,000 in utility tax money collected from the park and school districts since Jan. 1, 1971.

The rebate, scheduled for approval at the next village board meeting Aug. 6, was requested by the other taxing districts which claimed that their paying the 5 per cent utility tax to the village amounted to double taxation for property owners.

The village board agreed to make annual refunds, rather than exempt the park and school districts, on the advice of Village Atty. Jack Siegel.

Arlington Heights Finance Director said the refunds were really "village revenue sharing" and gave the following amounts:

- School Dist. 21: $3,450.92
- School Dist. 25: $26,508.67
- School Dist. 59: $4,867.89
- School Dist. 214: $27,827.14
- Arlington Heights Park District: $7,417.85

The estimated total refunds each year in the future will be about $30,000, Bondor said.

The 5 per cent utility tax is applied to electric, gas and telephone bills.

Stabbing at Henrici's leaves victim 'serious'

A Mexican national is in serious condition with stab wounds at Northwest Community Hospital and two brothers are in police custody after a fight yesterday morning at Henrici's Restaurant, 2375 S. Arlington Heights Rd., Arlington Heights.

Police said the trouble apparently began when Carlos S. Melgoza and Tony Carrillo, restaurant employees, began arguing about job assignments. A fistfight between the two then took place, police said.

According to reports, Carrillo telephoned his brother, Jose, who then came to the restaurant. A fight then ensued between Jose Carrillo and Melgoza, police said.

During the fight, Jose Carrillo allegedly stabbed Melgoza with a steak knife. The weapon was thrown away after the incident, police said, and has not been recovered.

MELGOZA WAS taken to the hospital by fire department ambulance, where he is listed in serious condition in the intensive care unit with a stab wound in the side.

Police have charged Jose Carrillo with aggravated assault. He is being held in Cook County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bond on the charge. Tony Carrillo was found to have entered the country illegally from Mexico, and is being held for immigration authorities.

Tony Carrillo swore out a battery warrant on Melgoza, alleging he bit him on the thumb in the first fight, police said. Melgoza will be held on $1,000 bond, when he is released from the hospital, police said.

Melgoza was also found to be an illegal alien, according to police.

A court date of Aug. 10 in the Arlington Heights branch of the Cook County Circuit Court has been set for all involved parties.

PROSPECT HEIGHTS firemen had to use air masks yesterday as they fought a fire at 903 Edward Dr. Heavy smoke poured from the Allen Lindstrom home, as the fire gutted the insides. Officials believe gasoline fumes exploded.

Bargain hunters crowd sidewalks

by BETTY LEE

In hopes of finding bargains among the baskets, racks and tables of sale merchandise, hundreds of people yesterday swarmed through Arlington Heights on the first day of "Sidewalk Days" which ends Saturday.

People browsed through the streets, stopping at some of the store fronts to look at anything from a typewriter with sticky keys to a rack of silky lingerie.

Kids of all ages tagged along with their mothers, looking at toys and candy. Sidewalk traffic was often jammed up by mothers pushing strollers through the crowds of people who slowly moved along the streets.

TRAFFIC WAS crowded by cars moving in and out of parking spaces, and kids scrambled to their bicycles when police cruised along the streets, announcing the consequences of unattended bikes.

Some looked for bargains, like Mrs. Grace Welch of Rolling Meadows. "I'm just browsing and if something catches my eye, I buy it," she said as she looked through a pile of fabrics.

"Well, I found a pair of pettipants," said Mrs. Alice Regalli of Arlington Heights, who looked a little embarrassed about her bargain. "I've been looking all over for them." She and her mother were browsing among the racks at the Ben Franklin Store.

TROY SLINKARD, Arlington Heights, parked his truck and decided that he was "just going to look around."

"I'm going up and down the street to see what I need," said Slinkard. A bin of spray paint caught his eye. "This usually costs a dollar a can."

Merchants and salespersons wore red striped vests and were busy ringing up the cash registers that had been transferred outside.

For Edmond Sites of Buffalo Grove, the sidewalk event caught him by surprise. Two weeks ago he dropped off some jewelry to be engraved and returned to pick it up. "I didn't even know this was here," he said, as he turned and glanced at the whirling carnival rides.

Watergate 'a real mess,' Mr. Average American says

alized how deep this was," Johnson said. "AS FAR AS I'm concerned now, I think if I had known then what I know now, I would just not have voted. I don't know what it (Watergate) is all going to lead to."

Johnson also has some opinions on the wallet-draining economic situation.

"I don't like these high prices. As of right now the business I'm in (Johnson works for the National Steel Service Center in Evanston), business has never been so good, but I hate to think what's going to happen when the roof caves in."

"As far as I'm concerned, I think the economy is about as high as it can get, but it's got to break," Johnson said. He said like most Americans he "doesn't know too much" about the Administration's Phase III and IV controls, adding "I don't know if he (Nixon) is swimming in all of this."

"I DO KNOW that I'm eating fewer and fewer meals," he said. "It's just ridiculous. I saw on television how farmers were killing chickens because it's just too expensive to raise them. When a situation gets to that point, it's bad news."

"I'll just do without," Johnson said of coping with the economy. "Inflation is here and it's a reality and if they try to call it anything else, it's poppycock as far as I'm concerned."

Like other Americans, he says the raises he gets aren't enough to keep up with rising prices. "I can't save anything. I'll be happy if I can stay healthy and my family can stay healthy."

"I'm just a middle class guy," he adds of his battle with inflation. "That's the way it is for everyone."

Homeowners win battle for small J.C. Penney's sign

Homeowners in the Surrey Ridge West and Heritage Park subdivisions have won their battle for a smaller sign at the Algonquin Road entrance to J.C. Penney's "Treasury" store now under construction in Rolling Meadows.

Instead of the 35-foot sign that had been planned, Penney's now says it will put up a 12-foot-high marker at the Algonquin Road driveway, which is directly opposite Kennelott Drive, a main entrance to Surrey Ridge West.

Homeowner representatives had met with officials from Penney's and asked them to lower the sign height, even though the 35-foot signs already had been approved by the City of Rolling Meadows.

YESTERDAY, Martin Cawley, 1418 S. Princeton Ave., said Penney's willingness to put up a smaller sign was a tribute to what can be accomplished through reasonable discussion.

"It showed good relations and that people can sit down at a meeting and work things out," Cawley said.

The 12-foot sign, 4½ feet lower than ground signs permitted by Arlington Heights ordinance, will be 4 by 10 feet in area.

Homeowners in the southwest corner of Arlington Heights want all signs along Algonquin Road to be limited, both in size and number, to prevent the highway from developing into another commercial strip.

A SPOKESMAN for Penney's said a full-size, 35-foot sign will be erected at the Golf Road entrance to the Treasury store, expected to open sometime next winter.

The homeowners had dubbed the 35-foot marker "Super Sign" and, in a petition to the Rolling Meadows City Council, expressed their fear that Treasury could touch off a sign war in which new and existing business on Algonquin Road would start requesting bigger and bigger signs.

The Rolling Meadows aldermen told the homeowners there was nothing they could do to prevent the sign construction, since the 35-foot height, five feet above the city's normal maximum, had been approved in the Treasury development plan.

Nevertheless, Cawley yesterday said he was grateful for the help of Ald. Tom Waldron and Rolling Meadows City Mgr. Jim Watson for their assistance in arranging the meeting with Penney's officials.

Fred Iwen, 1702 S. Fernandez Ave., president of the Heritage Park Homeowners Association, said he was "very pleased that Penney's had the foresight to be neighborly about the situation."

Mt. Prospect

Prior to the show, there is a short time called the warm-up in which several humorous things are done—joke telling, stage antics, and sometimes music, all trying to get the audience together as a group. Any other device which the announcers deem necessary to get the audience reacting is used. Years of experience have gone just into the warming up of audiences. This holds true of any program of T. or C. type program. The main purpose of the warm-up is to get the audience 'in the mood'.

Please give me some information on Susan St. James who is very pretty. Will you print her picture and tell me where I may write to her?

Susan St. James

You'll be happy to hear that Susan has already started taping, with Rock Hudson, new episodes for next season. Write to her in care of NBC-TV, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10020.

Susan is about to have a birthday. On Aug. 14th, she will turn 26 years old. The 5'8" actress is married to hair stylist, Tom Lucas. They now have a baby daughter. When not before the cameras, Susan loves camping, talking and doing things. She isn't one to follow traditions and now is vitally involved in the organic food area.

Could you please tell me a little about Gary Burghoff, who plays Radar in TV's M*A*S*H? I would like to know where he is from, and his marital status. He may not be sexy looking like Alan Alda, but he is cute and to me, he makes the show what it is, which is great!

Gary Burghoff

Looks are all in the eyes of the beholders and some would think Gary to be sexy-looking too! Originally from Bristol, Conn., he moved to Delavan, Wisc. as a sophomore in high school. Perhaps his musically inclined parents helped to influence Gary—by 13 he was playing the drums and while still in high school, he joined an orchestra as a singer, drummer and entertainer.

Gary's TV debut came on the CBS REPERTOIRE WORKSHOP. In the meantime, he was using his musical talent as a staff songwriter. The turning point in his professional career came with his being cast as the original Charlie Brown in "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown" in New York. That role, which lasted about three years, led to Gary's taking a screen test for his present role, plus the same one in the movie version of M*A*S*H.

The 5'6" actor married the former Janet Gale about a year and a half ago. One of Gary's associations has been with the Los Angeles Zoo—by treating injured birds which appear near his beach home at Malibu. He also raises finches and collects butterflies.

James Brolin is one of my favorites. Please tell me about him and where I can write to him. Is he married and how old is he? How many children does he have? Please print his picture.

P.C.
Arlington Heights

James Brolin

The role as Dr. Stephen Kiley won James an Emmy Award as the Best Supporting Actor in 1972. When James transferred from Santa Monica Junior College to UCLA to major in theatre arts, he also switched his sights from becoming an aeronautical engineer to being an actor. During the last dozen years, he has put in over 5,000 hours of class time studying with noted drama coaches. Within hours after the head of casting at 20th Century saw James' talent, Jim was signed to contract.

The three-one year old actor has been married to Jane Cameron since 1966. They have two sons, Josh and Jess. Send your letters to him in care of ABC-TV, 1330 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10019.

He is the good humor
 the weather or not

He's an unflappable good humor man. He occasionally sings, dances, throws snowballs at co-workers Fahey Flynn, Joel Daly, Bill Frink and John Drury. And, amidst all the fun and frolic, our cover personality also predicts the weather for Chicago and all those wonderful "boonies" around the Windy City. He's John Coleman, whose many tools include weather maps, radar screens, satellite photos, and the fire escape observation area just a few yards from the "Flynn-Daly Eyewitness News" set. A native Illinoisan, Coleman is now in his sixth year at WLS-TV, Channel 7. His reports are seen on the station's 6 and 10 p.m. newscasts.

Strike alters 'premiere week'

To those of you who are really looking forward to this year's version of "New Season Premiere Week" on television, let me assure you of one thing. As things stand now, the three major networks and most independents plan to give it a go the week beginning Monday, September 10. The writers strike is now just an unpleasant memory in Hollywood...the programs that were affected by the scribes' walkout are busily trying to recoup the lost production time...and ABC, CBS, and NBC are standing firm in their prediction that they'll be ready, be it just barely, for the early September kick-off.

THIS YEAR'S NEW season will not be like it was in past years, however. And, for the viewer, that's good. Why? Well, for the past several seasons, the three major nets would all try to beat one another by putting their premiere shows head-to-head during the same week. As a result, we as viewers had to make the choice of what new programs to watch. Often, when three programs all appeared to be worthwhile watching, the task of choosing one over the other two was a most frustrating experience.

Not that we won't see some of that this season. But, because of the writer's strike, we may get a slight respite. Some "new" shows, for example, will not have their first show quite ready for premiere week. But if the show is a result of a fine pilot aired this past season, the network may very well start the new year off with a repeat of the pilot, thus "buying" a week's time. Another alternative being pondered by the three broadcast powers is the insertion of specials into a premiere week slot, if the program regularly scheduled for that time is not quite ready.

Dick Van Dyke

NEW SEASON PROGRAMS AND PEOPLE: The cast is finally complete for CBS' new "Perry Mason." Besides Monte Markham as Mason, we'll see Sharon Acker as Della Street, Dane Clark as Lieutenant Tragg, Harry Guardino as Hamilton Burger, Albert Stratton as detective Paul Drake, and Brett Somers as Mason's new switchboard operator, Gertrude... "The FBI" will have two new agents, one a woman... Georgia Engel, who plays Ted Baxter's girl Georgette on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," will be in most of that series' episodes next season... At press time, Redd Foxx was still holding out for more money for "Sanford and Son," now in its third year. NBC reportedly has made a "final offer" of some $25,000 a week to Redd...

Former pro basketball star Elgin Baylor will be an announcer next season on NBA telecasts... Sammy Davis, Jr. will not be the regular host, but will make a good number of appearances on the new "NBC Follies" next year... It's a wealth of new cast for the completely revamped "Dick Van Dyke Show." Van Dyke will now portray an actor (the show's setting has been switched from Arizona to California). Fannie Flagg is no longer with the show, Barbara Rush has been added, as have Dick Van Patten and Henry Darrow. To add to the "DVD" confusion, co-star Hope Lange has told reporters that this will be her last season on the program...

Finally, Emmy winner Richard Thomas is the first to admit that last year's success story, "The Waltons," has a tremendous challenge to come up with strong plots. And, the program's producers are making sure the show will change with the times: the year will change from 1933 to 1934... John-Boy will graduate from high school... the stories won't end quite as happily as they have in the past.

Mildred Dunnock and Lee J. Cobb, re-creating their original Broadway roles, confront changing, disorienting times, in Arthur Miller's powerful drama, "Death of a Salesman." The acclaimed television special will be rebroadcast on Thursday, Aug. 2 on the CBS Television Network.
